Viet Cong Close In Post Overrun Four Miles From Saigon

SAIGON (AP)—A district headquarters and outpost only four miles from Saigon were attacked by the Viet Cong early Sunday, a U.S. military spokesman said.

Radio contact with the post was lost, and it was believed to have been overrun.

The spokesman said the Viet Cong opened up with mortars on the district headquarters at Binh Chanh, four miles west-southwest of the capital. A ground assault followed, he said.

No further contact had been reported with the outpost at midmorning, the spokesman said. Details were sketchy but it was believed the outpost had been manned by only a few popular force or regional troops.

Flare planes and armed helicopters were sent to the area during the early morning hours, but there was no immediate report as to whether they made contact with the Viet Cong.

At least one civilian was reported to have been killed and two others wounded.

Mariner Winds Up With Bonus Shot

PASADENA, Calif. (AP)—Mariner 4 finished sending back all 21 of its hoped-for Mars photos Saturday—and a bit of a bonus—back to earth.

After an interval of sending back engineering information, the recorder was expected to switch tracks automatically and start sending all pictures over again, starting with No. 1.

Mariner was 142,500,000 miles from earth when it completed its photo transmission.

The historic pictures were taken by the spacecraft's television camera during a 25-minute period July 14 when Mariner 4 passed within 8,115 miles of Mars.

'She Was a Fat Baby'

Thailand Beauty Wins Miss Universe Contest

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP)—An exotic raven-haired beauty nicknamed "Pook" for fat — Apasra Hongsakula of Thailand—was crowned Miss Universe for 1965 Saturday night.

She topped out the Finnish entrant, Virpi Miettinen of Helsinki, a blue-eyed blonde model who could assume the role of Miss Universe in case the winner cannot carry out her duties.

Second runner-up was Miss U.S.A. of Columbus, Ohio. Sweden's blonde artist, Ingrid Norrman, was third runner-up, and Anna Schult of Amsterdam, Holland, was fourth.

The 18-year-old, black-eyed student from Bangkok was one of the most popular contestants with 8,000 people watching the pageant in Miami Beach auditorium. Millions more watched on home television sets.

"I never dreamed of this," said Apasra. She had been nervous and did not eat lunch before the final competition.

Apasra is the first Miss Universe from Thailand and the first from her country to compete in this pageant in many years.

Her parents, Col. and Mrs. Perm Hongsakula, were in the audience. Her father is an officer in the Thai Royal Air Force.

"Apasra was a fat baby," her mother said. "That's why we named her Pook."

Apasra was instructed by Thailand's Queen Sirikit on how to act, how to walk and how to wear her hair before she came to the pageant.

"My queen will be very happy. I can't believe it all," said Apasra.

Immediately following her crowning and queen's walk down a long runway, other contestants ran to her side with kisses and congratulations.

She is 5 feet 4, a shapely 33-35, and weighs 110 pounds—minus some she lost during rehearsals.

Two Miners Die In Fire

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP)—Two miners, trapped for underground by a coal mine fire, were found dead Saturday night when rescued by rescue workers.

The men had barricaded themselves in a small room about 1,000 feet from the blaze which broke out about 6:30 a.m. Saturday at the Arkwright No. 1 mine of Christopher Coal Co. near Morgantown.

The victims, Charles Garrett, 38, and James J. Hess, were found huddled together about seven miles back from the mine entrance. The two died either from smoke inhalation or carbon monoxide poisoning.

High-Wire Breaks, Man Lives

TORONTO (CP)—A high-wire performer was injured Saturday night when the wire he was walking collapsed during the police games at Toronto's Varsity Stadium.

The performer, identified as James Cochran of Toronto, was taken to hospital where his condition is reported as satisfactory.

The 21-year-old Cochran received two broken legs when he fell about 60 feet to the ground.

Small Plane Believed Lost

TRENTON, Ont. (CP)—A single engine aircraft is believed missing somewhere between Picton, south of Belleville, and Toronto. The identity of the pilot of the aircraft, or the number of persons aboard was unknown.

American Arrested In Saigon Murders

SAIGON (AP)—An American sought in connection with the fatal shooting of the chief American advisor to the Vietnamese police force was arrested early Sunday, reliable information reported.

The man hunted in a citywide search since the shooting Friday night had been identified by Vietnamese police as Robert Kimball, a native of Utah.

Early Friday night at his Saigon home in what was believed to be a crime of passion were Jack E. Ryan, chief of the U.S. Aid Mission's public safety division, and a Vietnamese woman, Mrs. Nguyen Thi Hai.

WORKED TOGETHER

On Saturday police launched a search for Kimball, distributing pictures of him and questioning his acquaintances. He worked in the same U.S. operations mission division with Ryan.

While there was no official announcement immediately, reliable informants said Kimball was arrested at dawn at his home near downtown Saigon.

Anti-American Consulate Target Of Greeks

SALONIKA, Greece (AP)—A new mass demonstration erupted in Greece Saturday night aimed against the United States. President Johnson and the Greek royal family.

More than 5,000 youths, called out by the Salonika Students Union and the pro-Communist Lambrakis Youth Movement, marched through the streets of this northern city passing the U.S. consulate.

They screamed:

"Down with marionettes of Johnson, the murderer."

"Pull out of NATO."

"Down with the Hitleria."

This last was an open slur on King Constantine's mother, Queen Mother Frederika, who was born in Germany and as a child was a member of the Hitler youth movement.

Heavy police units were out in force in case of a new eruption.

More Walkouts Seen

No Hasty Action Likely in Strike

OTTAWA (CP)—The federal government promised Saturday not to take any precipitous action against striking postal workers.

At a hastily-called press conference to outline the government's position, Revenue Minister E.J. Benson said the minister in the postal dispute, striking postal workers.

COURTESY—Postal workers walked off the job here Saturday, to join the spreading national strike. There are no carriers in Courtenay, but the inside workers are picketing.

Judge J.C. Anderson, had asked all parties not to take such action. The request came in a telegram.

NO ACTION

Mr. Benson said he did not want to embark on any action similar to that taken in the 1957 railway strike when Parliament passed legislation to get strikers back to work. This kind of action, including use of troops to deliver the mail was not the kind of action the government wants to take.

Mr. Benson said the government is willing to have collective bargaining for all the civil service. He did not elaborate.

Postal employees had asked Mr. Benson, flanked by Postmaster-General Tremblay, and

Ex-Presidential Adviser Schlesinger Writes:

Kennedy Wanted Rusk Replaced

NEW YORK (AP)—Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr. says in the current Life magazine that the late President John F. Kennedy had decided in 1963 to replace Dean Rusk as state secretary after the 1964 U.S. presidential election.

In an installment from a forthcoming book, former presidential adviser Schlesinger does not say whom Kennedy had picked for the job, if anybody.

"He always had the dream that someone like Robert McNamara (now defense secretary) might some day take command and make the department a vigorous partner in the enterprise of foreign relations," Schlesinger says.

Schlesinger says Kennedy came to his decision about Rusk reluctantly, and earlier had rejected suggestions that he be replaced.

Kennedy, Schlesinger says, had chosen Rusk after a single talk with him.

"Kennedy remained impressed by Rusk's capacity to define, but grew increasingly depressed by his reluctance to decide," Schlesinger writes.

However, when it was suggested in 1962 that Rusk be replaced, Schlesinger says Kennedy declared: "I can't do that to Rusk; he is such a nice man."

"He was also an able and useful man," Schlesinger says, "and most compelling perhaps was Kennedy's feeling that dismissal of his secretary of state would constitute too severe a comment on his original judgment."

A reorganization of the state department in November, 1961, including the replacement of Chester Bowles by George Ball as No. 2 man, "somewhat improved the situation," Schlesinger writes.

The assignment of W. Averell Harriman as assistant secretary for far eastern affairs, Schlesinger says, "gave far eastern policy a coherence and force which it had not had for years."

But the department remained a puzzle to Kennedy to the end, Schlesinger says.

"No one ran Rusk, Ball and Harriman constituted a loose triumvirate... and, passing things back and forth among themselves, managed to keep a few steps ahead of the crises," he writes.

"By the autumn of 1963 (the year he was assassinated) the president had reluctantly made up his mind to allow Rusk to leave after the 1964 election and to seek a new secretary of state."

No Precipitous Action

for a salary increase of $600,000. The government last week approved a civil service commission report recommending an increase from $300.00 to $360.00 retroactive to Oct. 1 last year. Top salary under this scheme would be $4,680 for letter carriers and $5,050 for sorters.

Mr. Benson said the postmen had made their point when they suggested special commissioners to investigate their salary demands. But he warned the government cannot act "with a shotgun at its head."

NOT ACCEPTABLE

He indicated granting an increase in salary in the face of a strike is not acceptable. The government cannot act on this basis. Such a course could invite other civil servants to do the same.

If the Anderson report found there is some unfairness in the wage structure, the government would have to consider it carefully, he said.

Mr. Tremblay said that it would be difficult to maintain even first-class mail service in some provinces by next Thursday if the strike continues. Mr. Penzell said the government is ready to take further steps to obtain court injunctions to curb picketing if it becomes necessary.

He indicated injunctions would be sought where free access to post offices are unavailable.

The government has obtained such injunctions in only two cities, Montreal and Vancouver.

Mr. Benson said the health and welfare department is looking at ways to get pension cheques to people if the strike continues. However, he said he "fervently hopes postmen will go back to work to give Judge Anderson time to do his job."

The judge, since his arrival in Ottawa Friday from Belleville, has met with Prime Minister Pearson and with the special cabinet committee.

FINAL AUTHORITY

Mr. Benson, describing the government's position, said it cannot be classified as an ordinary employer. The government must be the final authority.

Meanwhile, striking postal employees, faced with picket-restricting court injunctions in two provinces, continued their walkout for the fourth straight day today.

The British Columbia Supreme court Friday granted an injunction prohibiting picketing of Vancouver post offices. The injunction expires at 10 a.m. Monday.

Mr. Justice J. F. Aldrich, in granting the injunction, said the strike is illegal and the public could be harmed if picketing continued.

However, 35 members of trade unions — self-appointed "citizen" pickets — marched in front of the struck province.

BE PREPARED

Bill Kay, secretary-treasurer of the Vancouver branch of the Postal Employees' Association, said the membership will observe the injunction to the letter. He has told members to be prepared to march again Monday.

Nearly half of Canada's 20,000 postal employees could be off their jobs by Monday when leaders of the Postal Workers Brotherhood have scheduled a meeting in Ottawa. Judge Anderson meets the same day with the executive of the brotherhood.

The walkouts began Thursday in Montreal and Vancouver and have since spread throughout Quebec, Ontario and B.C. Almost 20,000 employees are out in about 70 cities.

Local branches in Thunder Bay and Sarnia have scheduled meetings Monday to decide on action.

Postmaster-General Tremblay has announced that Quebec, Ontario and B.C. will handle first class mail only. The nation-wide embargo on third class mail remains in effect, no money packages or special delivery items will be received in "citizen" pickets — marched in front of the struck province.

Council Business

Esquimalt council will meet at 7:30 p.m. Monday, the only local council to hold a meeting this week. On the agenda are letters on regional planning, the engineer's monthly report, and the report of the intermunicipal committee meeting.

French Destroyed Bridges

U.S. Photos Faked Says Courtenay Man

VANCOUVER (CP) — North Vietnamese bridges lying in ruins for years are being pictured by the U.S. government as recently destroyed by aerial bombing, says a Canadian who served until 1963 on the International Control Commission in Viet Nam.

Retired ROCAF Sqdn. Ldr. Hugh Campbell said many of the bridges were in fact blown up by retreating ground forces in the French-Vietnamese war of the early 1950s.

SEVERE CRITIC

Sqdn. Ldr. Campbell has been a severe critic of American actions in Viet Nam, where he travelled extensively as a commission member.

Now a civil defence director in Courtenay, B.C., his statements were made in an editorial-page article in the Vancouver Sun.

He referred to pictures in U.S. magazines, said to show the results of bombing by American planes.

"There they lay, superstructures intact but broken-backed across streams and rivers," he wrote. "I last saw them in 1953."

IMAGINATION

Addressing himself to U.S. Defence Secretary Robert McNamara, he continued: "What a fantastic bridgebuilding program Ho Chi Minh must have conducted in 1964 to have got all those bridges up again for your air boys to knock down in early 1965.

"It staggers the imagination, mine anyway.

"And the uncanny ability of your people to bomb bridges from underneath.

NOSTALGIA

"One of the bridges—the one at Dong Hoi—I know very well, having visited its ruins every day for three months.

"There was a certain amount of nostalgia in seeing it again, exactly as I remembered it from '53.

Troops for War

Chiang Offers Men To Aid Vietnamese

TAIPEI, Formosa (UPI) — Nationalist Chinese President Chiang Kai-shek said Saturday his government is prepared to assume "greater responsibility" in fighting Communism by supporting South Viet Nam.

Observers took Chiang's statement as an indication that the Nationalist government was prepared to send troops to help South Viet Nam win the war against Viet Cong guerrillas.

NO PREVIOUS OFFER The United States and South Viet Nam have asked non-Communist nations to extend aid to the Saigon government but the Nationalists thus far have made no official offer.

Chiang's statement was read at a mass rally held here in connection with Captive Nation Week. Anti-Communist leaders from many countries attended.

The president's message said, "We must go one step further to eliminate the Peiping regime with a single blow before it can develop nuclear weapons, thus winning total victory in our struggle against Communism and sparing the world and mankind the scourge of a nuclear war."

Chinese military sources said at least 100,000 of the 600,000-man Nationalist armed forces are ready to move out in a few hours.

The 77-year-old president said the outcome of the Vietnamese war will decide "not only the independence and freedom of the Republic of Viet Nam and the freedom of its people, but also the destiny of other Asian peoples and the peace and security of the world."

Saturday night's demonstration was called to protest the death in Athens street fighting last Wednesday of the first casualty of the disorders, a 16-year-old Greek boy who was killed by a tear gas canister.

In Midst of Political Crisis Life in Athens Is Tense

One moment you are sitting quietly in an outdoor cafe, drinking thick Greek coffee and observing the time-honored tradition of admiring passing females. All is peaceful.

MOB OF YOUTHS

In the next moment a mob of youths materializes in the street shouting "Down with the traitor government" and "Papanicolaou... Papanicolaou... Papanicolaou."

Thus is the newsmonger quickly caught up in the fierce political struggle going on in Greece between the supporters of ousted Premier George Papanicolaou and the supporters of youth King Constantine and the new premier, George Athanasiadis Novas.

There follows a flurry of activity as cafe patrons scurry for shelter, waiters quickly breakables from the tables, and shutters go down over shop windows.

Traffic stops as the youths, who seemingly appear from nowhere chant their slogans in the middle of the street. The policeman on traffic duty retreats to a nearby doorway, making no move to interfere.

INTRODUCTION This was my introduction to Athens Friday night. As suddenly as it began, the activity ended. The youths dispersed, some simply walking away, others replying to a cafe for a beer to cool throats parched from shouting.

"This goes on all the time," a Greek acquaintance explained. "The trouble is that though the anti-government demonstrations usually have been brief and end by themselves, there is always the danger of an explosion."

They can balloon into mass riots anytime," he said. Police and military troops are on a 24-hour alert. But they have orders not to interfere with demonstrations unless things appear to be getting out of hand.

The riot police have been staying out of sight most of the time the last few days, but jeeps of men with truncheons and tear gas are poised to move in if the need arises.

For a city with a week of turbulent political riots behind it, Athens seemed calm enough this morning despite the toll of hundreds of persons wounded over the past week and one student dead.

This correspondent found Athens as he had remembered it, on arrival here Friday evening. The evening crowds — mostly families with women and children — jammed the outdoor cafes in the central Constitution Square.

Your Good Health

Knee Joint Susceptible In Body Contact Sports

By JOSEPH MOLNER, MD

Dear Dr. Molner: In the football season last fall my 11-year-old son injured his knee but continued to play with a slight limp. The swelling was near the surface in front, just below the kneecap, and when we finally noticed it, the doctor stopped his participation.

From a layman's standpoint, it would be similar to "water on the knee." It appeared to be a bruise to me, but it continued each time he played.

With hot compresses and no rest, it seems to have healed but he's already talking about the coming season.

Three questions: Do you suggest that he play this year? Would additional padding such as a basketball knee guard help prevent this bruising? Are there any exercises that might be prescribed to strengthen the knee?—JOHN R.

I'm in favor of sports, and exercises, for our young ones. But I'm not against taking chances with these children.

The knee is a joint that is particularly susceptible to injury if a sport involves bodily contact. Most youngsters escape such an injury. When the knee is hurt, I am thoroughly in favor of giving it all the time necessary for complete healing. If your boy is 13, or even an old veteran of 14, before he goes back to football, it's better than letting him develop a knee injury that will last all his life.

EFFUSION He doubtless had an effusion (accumulation of water) at the knee joint. Frequently, in such cases, there is also damage to the cartilage. Whether he can (or should) play this season is something that your doctor, or an orthopedic specialist, should decide. Is there any residual damage, or is the knee fully recovered? That's the question.

If I were you, I would let the specialist decide. I know how you feel. You don't want your boy to back away from a few hard bumps. Life is full of them. But if there is an injury which needs time before it can be fully cured, I'm sure you want him to wait for the necessary interval, no matter what.

A knee guard or elastic support may help protect against a direct blow. It will not do much if a heavy blow against the leg puts strain on the entire joint.

In some cases special exercises can help protect the injured area, but it has to be prescribed specifically. The wrong exercise can ruin the knee.

I urge you, sir, in this case, to rely on your doctor's advice.

Dear Dr. Molner: I know a salesman who sells steel cookware. He claims that aluminum and the old-time black cast iron cookware ruins food cooked in them. I just want to know the facts.—T. D. F.

I don't know why this nonsensical story keeps bobbing up—or rather, I don't know why people let it worry them. There is no basis whatever for thinking that aluminum or cast iron pots and pans are harmful.

NOTE TO M. M. S.: The sperm count can vary from time to time. A low count is a strong indication, but not proof, that permanent sterility exists.

Boys Harassing Relatives Of Raped Girl

OKLAHOMA CITY (UPI) — Teen-age boys have been harassing the relatives of a 15-year-old rape victim, officers said Saturday.

Police said the boys have been driving by the home of the girl's aunt, shouting insults and throwing beer cans on the lawn.

All the suspects are free on bond, a waiting preliminary hearing in September.

Officers said patrol cars have been assigned to the neighborhood of the girl's relatives to prevent further incidents.

Germans Told

No Concessions

MUNICH, Germany (UPI) — U.S. roving Ambassador W. Averell Harriman Saturday assured Germans it is inconceivable that concessions to the Russians in Europe would be offered for a settlement in Viet Nam.

Harriman told newsmen, "There is absolutely no connection between the Viet Nam and the European problems."

NO BARTER

"It would not be conceivable to trade or barter an agreement in one for the other," Harriman said. "Russia is not involved in the conflict in Viet Nam. North Viet Nam, aided and abetted by China, has attacked South Viet Nam, and the Soviet Union is not involved in that conflict."

Harriman's remarks, just before he conferred with Chancellor Ludwig Erhard about his secret talks in Moscow, were designed to reassure German leaders who are fearful they may have to pay the price of an East-West settlement.

DETERMINATION

"Our determination to work with Europe is so clear," Harriman said, "that I do not recognize that fear. There is no possibility of the United States making any agreement with the Soviet Union except in consultation with its European allies and taking their considerations into account."

Police Win Round

Bikinis Replace Birthday Suits

SAINT-TROPEZ, France (UPI) — Gendarmes cruising discreetly offshore Saturday used loudspeakers to warn nudists against using Pamplonne Beach to soak up the sun in the raw.

The police were attired in conservative khaki bathing trunks and used the bull horns to warn that anyone caught bare on the beach would be prosecuted by authorities in nearby Draguignan.

Nudists have been flocking to Pamplonne Beach for years but until recently they had the sands to themselves. Now, the spot has been discovered by campers. And the campers' daughters.

The campers complained to police they can't let their daughters out of the tents because of the acres of skin on the beach.

About 400 indignant nudists crying "Shame! Shame! Shame!" Thursday marched on a four-man gendarme patrol, forcing the embarrassed police to retreat. The order to keep the nudists off the beach then was issued. Round One went to the nudists and Round Two to the cops.

In the past, nudists have fought police patrols with look-outs, raid warnings and an alert system which would have done credit to the movies.

In fact, a movie — The Gendarme of Saint Tropez — was made about the sunny south of France's fights against the nudists of Pamplonne.

At least the sun was shining Saturday, which was more than could be said for most of Europe, and even with a bikini on it was nice to be there.

Man Poisoned, Couldn't Read

BRADFORD, England (UPI) — A coroner has ruled that a Pakistani who drank liniment prescribed for application to his knee could not read the label on the bottle.

The man was Mohammed Said, 50, a textile worker. He died of poisoning shortly after being admitted to a local hospital.

Eight Die

Four Men Rescued From Torpedo Alley

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — A grim procession of boats brought back to shore Saturday the four survivors of what may have been the first "Torpedo Alley" sinking in more than 20 years.

These were among the 12 men who were aboard the deep-sea trawler Shogun when she was blown in two Friday night in a freak explosion, almost surely caused by a torpedo. Eight died.

LITTLE HOPE

Coast Guard spokesmen held out little hope that any other bodies would be found. Sharks were sighted in the area shortly after the disaster.

The 65-foot-long wooden boat out of Portland, Maine, had been working 41 miles due east of False Cape on North Carolina's Outer Banks, a watery graveyard for ships for years and the infamous "Torpedo Alley" where Nazi U-boats sank scores of Allied vessels during the Second World War.

She had been out for four days and 17,000 pounds of chicken scallops were resting in ice below decks. Then about 9:13 p.m., with the winch working hard to pull in the latest catch an ugly metal shape broke surface with the scallops.

Norman Mallet, on his first voyage as skipper of the nearby trawler Provier and for five years the mate aboard the Shogun, saw the net coming in. And he saw what looked like a torpedo.

JUST WENT

"It just went," he said. "There was just a flash and it was all in pieces. There was nothing but little bits of debris, and the dory and the top of the powerhouse floating around."

A deckhand aboard the Provier said it was not unusual to bring up explosives from the boat's Outer Banks. Not too long ago, he said, the Provier pulled up a box of ammunition bearing a 1942 date.

Scotland Yard Bedsheets Secure Prisoner

LONDON (AP) — Two Scotland Yard detectives grappled with a gunman in a London hotel Saturday, then desperately held him by his ankles after he tried to jump from a third-floor window.

The detectives almost lost their grip on the 230-pound man. But they tied his ankles with sheets and secured these to a wall fitting as the man dangled over the street below. Police reinforcements finally pulled the man in. And he was taken to a police station for questioning.

The detectives had gone to the hotel, near Trafalgar Square in the centre of London, to question a man about his bill. A fight broke out, the man rushed to an open window and dived through head first. The detectives managed to catch him before he fell.

Police recovered a loaded revolver, which fell during the struggle.

Irate Reds Defy Law

MOSCOW (UPI) — Angry Soviet truckdrivers won a "cabbage war" recently by besieging government officials with a noisy, horn-blowing demonstration, it was reported here Saturday.

The 40 truckers, unable to break a government bottleneck blocking delivery of their cabbage, jammed their trucks into the square facing the Kirgizia provincial council of ministers building in Frunze and refused to move.

The government finally gave in and agreed to unload the cabbage.

More Time to Think

HOW REFRESHING it would be to hear a cabinet minister for once say, "Looks as if we've messed things up a bit, but now we'll put them right." This could very well have been Municipal Affairs Minister Campbell's response, on his return from a business trip to Quebec, to the Greater Victoria municipalities' agitation over the seeming fact that they had been given, in mid-July, 60 days to make up their minds by plebiscite or otherwise whether they would participate in all or some of the recommended functions of the proposed regional joint services board—a period regarded as far too short to set up a well-informed vote.

The minister now says the municipal fears were groundless; the 60 days have not yet begun; the details of the letters patent finally to be recommended have yet to be worked out at meetings of technical staffs before the period for decision-making begins.

Yet this reassurance hardly squares with Mr. Campbell's press release of July 16 which says, in part: "The legislation provides that the initiative at this point must pass into the hands of the municipal councils who may be intending to place one or more of the recommended functions to a vote of their respective ratepayers. Within the electoral districts" (the unorganized areas) "the same initiative can be achieved through the presentation of a petition from 10 per cent of the ratepayers within the area requesting a vote and the legislation provides that the minister must provide for the holding of a plebiscite with respect to each function requested. These decisions by councils or the electoral areas will be taking place during the next 60 days."

Can these words be interpreted otherwise than that the 60 days of decision had started?

However, if Mr. Campbell cannot be given full marks for frankness on this occasion (or alternatively for recalling what he or his department has previously said) he at least can be commended for being ready to listen to reason or quick to perceive it himself and to act accordingly.

Had he indeed intended to try to get his regional administrative "vehicle" on the road within 60 days, and had he then persisted in such a deadline, the chances are that with a light late-summer vote, an atmosphere of hurry and a lack of certainty of the full meanings of the regional plan, it would have gone on the road (if at all) minus some of its most important parts.

The joint services board being regarded favorably in principle by practically all the municipal leaders of the area, its prospects are much brighter now that Mr. Campbell says there will be plenty of time for settling and publicly clarifying the details, and that plebiscites, if they are wanted, need not be held before the regular December elections.

Worth Preserving

TO THOSE WHO travel year after year on U.S. highways, one of the great pleasures of a motor-trip into Canada, and particularly into British Columbia, is the absence of billboards, progressive signs and other advertising matter along the highways.

The B.C. provincial regulations are strict on this point, and so are those of many organized territories. The result is that often magnificent vistas are not vandalized and the mind is not revolted by mile after mile reminders that Reno, or some other attraction, is now only "X" miles ahead.

Except for "Keep B.C. Green" and other highway department notices, British Columbia highways are singularly clear of this type of distraction, and it is to be hoped that the restraining of vulgar commercialism will long continue.

At the same time there must be sympathy for those people whose business depends upon attracting the attention of the motoring public. There is the local case of the "Wooded Wonderland" tourist attraction on the Patricia Bay Highway. The operator who has an artistic and well-hidden operation complains that he is not allowed by the Saanich council to put up the roadside signs that will let his potential customers know his location.

He has decided to take the law into his own hands by erecting the signs he deems necessary, using the good of the tourist industry as his "legitimate" excuse.

Reasonable though his request may have been, there is of course no excuse for breaking the law. If the operator succeeds in carrying out his threat what is to stop dozens of other roadside operators from taking this as a precedent?

Individual injustices may arise, but as in everything else the will of the majority must prevail, and there is no doubt that the bulk of the people of this province are with the various governing bodies in their insistence upon preservation of the rural amenities and the beauty of the countryside.

Brave Decision

SIR ALEC DOUGLAS-HOME, who gave up a peerage dating from 1604 to enter the House of Commons as Britain's 43rd prime minister, has stepped down from his high office, and without any loss of dignity. In fact this mild-mannered and scholarly man who has served his country with distinction, particularly as a cabinet minister at a time when Britain was encouraging its colonies on the road of independence, has gained in stature by his decision to resign and allow a younger and more dynamic personality to take the Tory helm.

Sir Alec accepted the Conservative leadership and the prime ministership during the party revolt of 1963 and on the resignation of Mr. Harold Macmillan. But he was diffident about acceptance, even reluctant. He felt, so his friends said, that he was not the colorful leader, the quick and ruthless debater that his party needed to continue in office.

Sure enough, his Conservatives lost the next general election—although by the narrowest margin—to Mr. Harold Wilson and his Labour party.

Ever since there have been uneasy stirrings within the Conservative party, a feeling that Sir Alec was not the man to lead a victorious march to office.

In Canada there was something of a parallel during Mr. Diefenbaker's term as prime minister when many of his strongest lieutenants quarreled with his policies and resigned from office, and the party's strength was seriously sapped at a time when unity was so needed.

It took high courage for Sir Alec to step down. But he made his decision for the good of the party and the nation, to still the critics and provide an opportunity for a new leader to weld all factions into the formidable front necessary to contest an election which is unlikely to be long delayed.

ONE of the biggest questions marks still hanging over federal politics is whether there will be an election this fall.

Even next spring, for that matter.

For the question stems from worries of more than half the members of the House of Commons that they will have to conduct a campaign within new constituency boundaries.

"It's quite a tug-of-war among these members—the policies and politics of their various parties pulling from one direction and their own concerns from the other."

There is little doubt that the great majority of MPs would rather face voters they already know according to patterns of support or opposition.

Their constituency organizations are set up to deal with these patterns. They know where they can depend upon support and where they need to do extra work to get out supporting votes.

Redistribution does not mean that these constituency organizations will forget such matters. The trouble is that many organizations will be split and unable to deal with them along known lines.

For many sitting MPs, this will mean getting to know not only new voters, but also new constituency supporters who may not be ready to do the job expected of them.

It is inevitable that they will have to face such a situation in the long run. Redistribution must come eventually—it is supposed to come every 10 years after the decennial census.

The large lament is: "Why does it have to happen to me?" Whether it will or not is still a matter in the hands of top-level strategists.

The government might call an election at any time.

The Opposition, if it truly combined forces, might defeat the government at any time and force an election.

Is either likely to happen? That's hard to say—after a fashion.

Do MPs Really Want Elections?

By RICHARD JACKSON, Colonist Ottawa Bureau

Members in the Commons have chalked out every time there was a vote of non-confidence (except when they knew the Liberals were supporting the Liberals), by abstaining or voting with the government.

At their annual meeting last week there were some voices calling for an election and threats of joining with the Conservatives to force one. They may have meant it, but it would be hard to prove on past performance.

As for the Social Credit Party, its leaders have frequently said there should be something done (presumably an election), to provide a majority government, but they have as frequently led their members into voting in support of the government.

A pronouncement last week by Robert Thompson may show why... He demanded that the government broaden the investigation made during the Dorion inquiry on threat of ceasing to support the government in the House.

That was, if nothing else, clear admission that the Liberals have been supporting the government, despite past denials of such action.

With this divergence of feeling in the Opposition, the question of an election is probably left to the government, whose leaders see nothing to fear from redistribution.

So there will be an early election? Ask Lucien Rivard.

Quarrel in India

By Cyril Dines from New Delhi

A bitter and embarrassing row has broken out in India's west coast which was overrun by the Indian army in December, 1961.

Two mighty neighbors, the states of Maharashtra and Mysore, are eager to possess it. The Mysore ministry, convinced that a plot has been hatched in Delhi to give Goa to Maharashtra, is threatening to resign in a body.

Some of the Mysorean ministers have been privately attributing unworthy motives to Indian Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri. They say he foresees another conflict with Morarji Desai for the Indian leadership before the 1967 elections.

They allege that he has made a deal with his defence minister, Yashwantrao Chavan, who is a Maratha and a former chief minister of Maharashtra, the Marathas' state. In return for guaranteeing Goa's merger with Maharashtra before the end of this year, Mr. Chavan, they say, has promised full support of the Marathas for Mr. Shastri in his impending battle with Mr. Desai.

But most Indians accept the prime minister's assurance that the cabinet have reached no decision on Goa. The Congress parliamentary board has simply agreed with the Goa chief minister that perhaps the best plan is to hold a special election in Goa in November on the single issue of the state's future status.

This is an abrupt departure from the late Mr. Nehru's policy. Concerned by world reaction to India's invasion of Goa, he wanted it to retain its special and private identity for as long as possible.

In April last year, shortly before his death, he persuaded his Congress parliamentary board to agree that Goa should be allowed to keep its present status—a union territory—for at least 10 years. Now this decision is evidently to be disregarded. Most Indians assume this to be the achievement of the defence minister.

Everyone expects the pro-Maharashtra party in Goa to win the election.

Mysore is accusing Maharashtra of nursing "expansionist ambitions," and history makes this seem likely. The Marathas have long been the

Now the state, which is already the third biggest in India with a population of 40 million, is casting a greedy eye not only on Goa but also on substantial parts of Mysore.

The chief threat to Goa's separate existence lies in the fact that it has 350,000 Hindus and 15,000 Muslims. But it also has 230,000 Christians and these have done most to form the special character of Goa society.

Goan Hindus wish to be absorbed fully into the bosom of Mother India, where the Goan Christians would become a negligible minority and where the austere life of Hindu life might be imposed on the relaxed and Europeanized gaily of the enclave.

UNEASY lies the head, to paraphrase the cliché of another era, that bears the iron weight of responsibility for high office in our time of troubles. No better example could be found than President Guillermo Leon Valencia of Colombia.

He finds himself caught between the political and economic turmoil of his own country and the demands of the banker-economists in Washington for stern fiscal reforms. As he knows only too well, the drastic remedies—devaluation of the peso—is a—could tip the balance toward more inflation, greater chaos and popular revolt. The president recalls wryly that when he was persuaded to devalue two years ago the experts told him prices would rise only 7 to 9 per cent. They rose, in fact, 43 per cent.

In his mahogany-paneled office in the National Palace, he answers a series of questions with unhesitating assurance. Valencia is considered the most brilliant extemporaneous speaker in the political life of a nation that prizes eloquence.

"Devaluation," he says, "is in reality a technical financial exercise good or bad, depending on the circumstances in which it is to be applied. But there is a tremendous gap between the theoretical thesis as it is drafted in the economists' study and the market squares of underdeveloped countries. We will do everything we can to avoid devaluation."

Pride of place and position, a Latin pride, is important. The president spoke with feeling of a statement he said had been made by James Fowler, head of the United States AID mission, that if Colombia wished to continue receiving help it would have to devalue. This was "incompatible with Colombian sovereignty," and he might have added, that carrying out drastic reforms such as an effective devaluation requires administrative skills and disciplines beyond most underdeveloped countries.

Valencia stresses his loyalty to the United States. When President Charles de Gaulle of France was here, Valencia in his address at the official dinner, declared that, while cultural ties with Europe were close, the tie with America would always be pre-eminent.

To this reporter he expressed gratitude for American help, training, helicopters and other equipment in suppressing guerrilla bands that have terrorized parts of the country.

The government has had considerable success, the president said, and this is confirmed by others, in driving the marauders back into jungle hideouts in the high Central Cordillera. The bandit gangs, some of whom are believed to have trained in Cuba, are reduced to a hard core of 150 to 200 fighters. The military have surrounded two principal centres, one in Marquetia and the other in Riochiquito, where the trackless wilderness the guerrillas are thought to be trying to regroup.

When he talks of the permanent inter-American military force proposed by the Johnson Administration, Valencia reflects the concern of virtually all Latin-American leaders over the way in which this force will be used. It should, he says, always support those governments with an authentically popular origin because that is the basis of the democratic system. Any other use of such a force would mean overriding the free will of the people.

Giving For Guns

From Colonist Files

PREPARATIONS were being made in the Victoria area for the national registration, 25 years ago. It was to be a whirlwind, three-day affair.

"National registration stations will be opened in Victoria, four in Oak Bay and two in Esquimalt, exclusive of other arrangements being made for the adjoining area of Saanich. . . . All persons over the age of 16, male or female, will be required to register, responding to the national registration questionnaire recently published."

An Ottawa report said Trans-Canada Air Lines might "introduce stratosphere planes in 1941, flying at 20,000 feet or more."

"The flight from Montreal to Vancouver now takes about 16 hours with four or five stops en route. Stratosphere planes could make the hop in 11 to 12 hours with one stop at Winnipeg."

"Generous responses are being received daily in the appeal for machine-guns for the more effective arming of Victoria troops," the Colonist reported 20 years ago.

"On Saturday the gift of three was acknowledged through these columns, together with a number of generous cash donations, which will go far toward making up the sum necessary to purchase another. Today it is possible to announce that another will be provided by Victoria as a result of the patriotism of Messrs. Lemon, Gossman Co. Ltd."

The firm had given $1,000 to buy "the best gun available for the money," $50 of which was contributed by the company's employees.

"Flying is the greatest ever!" wrote home Douglas Whittier, one of five young Victorians in training as an aviator at Toronto, prior to being sent to England to join the Royal Flying Corps. "It has got everything tucked off the map. . . . Imagine sailing along over the water about 700 feet up at a rate of 70 miles an hour, and everything steady as a rock. You can hardly imagine that, can you?"

The preceding year was said to have produced "a revolution in residential architecture" in Victoria, 15 years ago.

"No longer are homes whose only advantage is plenty of space, deemed desirable. The homes must be aesthetically and out, and the grounds on which they are erected must be of corresponding size and beauty."

"Not only is this observable in the case of prominent mansions, of which this city can now boast very many, but of cottage homes, erected by labor and proudly claimed as theirs by those who earn their bread by the sweat of their brows."

"The present building season will, it is estimated, produce in the neighborhood of 300 new homes within or near the corporation boundaries. The majority of these will be in cost range between $1,000 and $2,000, which even in this expensive country is sufficient to build not only a comfortable and convenient but a pretty cottage."

A letter from a Cowichan man visiting Victoria called attention to the need for a wagon road between settlement and town, 100 years ago.

"I find your market short of Island butter. But let it not be said the country cannot supply the demand, for there are from four to five hundred pound pats of butter now at the settlement, which would have been sent to town yesterday, but there was no steamer. What we want is a weekly market and you shall have it as well supplied. Besides, butter at a lower figure than the present you shall have fat beef, mutton, pork and veal at a bit per pound; venison at two pounds for a bit; grouse, salmon, vegetables and fruit in proportion. . . ."

The Colonist apologized for the poor paper it was using, owing to non-arrival of regular supplies of printing paper on the bark Anna Adamson, now long overdue from England, and "the scarcity of the article in San Francisco."

Fireflies

From The Ottawa Journal

A chemical company in New Jersey is asking people to go out on a summer evening, lure fireflies with a blinking flashlight, catch them in a net, put them in a jar, seal the jar, put it in the freezer and then take the frozen fireflies to the company and get paid one cent each for them.

This is too much. There may be many things we can do without for the sake of scientific research and progress. But fireflies we can not do without. And any bounty hunter tempted to take up the offer should try to sell his soul instead. It would be less of a loss.

Victoria Has Pockets of Absolute Poverty

Origin and destination surveys and traffic flow maps, both of which are important preliminaries to any study of people and their movements, show that we are not as adventurous as we would like to think.

Most of us, unless we have jobs which specifically take us all over the city, follow a movement pattern which varies little from day to day. It's home-to-work-to-home most days and, in the evenings and on weekends, we normally follow a go-somewhere-have-been-many-times-before.

And so, unless you get an opportunity to look at a "realistic quality" map, as I recently did, you would not know that we have many pockets of absolute poverty in Victoria.

In about seven different sections of the city there are areas where the housing is far below the standard generally acceptable for good health, let alone comfort. In at least 19 other areas housing is rated as poor.

— and when this survey says "poor" it means just that. One of the areas is designated for an urban renewal project. It is south of Hillside between Blanshard and Rose and south to Fernbrook.

The provisional plan is provided for low-cost housing in the district but, it was pointed out, people would have to be spilled out during construction and where would they go?

CITY HALL COMMENT

This led to a general discussion of units to take care of present needs let alone those of the future.

I think aldermen were shocked when it was brought home to them that people are living in squalor and hardship within crying distance of some of the most progressive parts of the city.

About 25 per cent of the total of Victoria's welfare cases (and this, of course, means bad housing) are living in an area east and west of Bay Street and a few blocks to the north and south. There are other conditions in Victoria West, Springridge, James Bay and Chinatown.

As the mayor said, there apparently is need for better housing in these and other districts of the city and we had better do something about it.

There is machinery under the federal urban renewal plan but a lot of information will have to be accumulated before the city goes into action.

But action we should have —

Welfare Wrong Department

Medicare Martin's Job

By IAN STREET

It must be embarrassing in these momentous days, to be in the shoes of the Hon. Eric Martin.

He is the minister of health for B.C., yet with national medicare on the way, he is reduced to answering reporter's questions with what he carefully notes is only a personal opinion.

The voluntary medicare scheme which goes into effect here Sept. 1 comes under the welfare department.

When he went to Ottawa for last week's federal-provincial conference, where a medicare would be agreed, it was to be expected that Premier Bennett would take along as his adviser Welfare Minister Black.

The provincial government has always regarded its voluntary scheme as, at best, something remotely connected with what is usually meant by the term medicare.

The B.C. program offers primarily assistance to low income groups through a subsidy on medical insurance premiums.

Now, however, the federal government has offered to pay half the estimated cost of a comprehensive medicare plan, starting in 1967, and it appears that B.C. is willing to go along.

CAPITAL REPORT

Indeed, we'd be pretty silly not to, although there are several points in the Pearson program that don't appear too practical.

Still this was only an outline of the plan and details are to be worked out at a technical session scheduled for September.

And who is B.C. to send to this session? Our welfare minister, I suggest, might find himself unable to contribute a great deal to talk at this level.

The NDP is always anxious to make political capital out of the fact that Mr. Martin was passed over when the B.C. voluntary medicare plan was shelved into the welfare department.

Several speakers, during the last session, rose to hurl jibes at Mr. Martin in the House. And they are now suggesting, though it is stronger than a mere suggestion, that the health minister was too outspoken in his opposition to certain principles contained in the present plan.

More than once, Mr. Martin has said he is opposed to financing medicare on the basis of premiums which he says mean the rich man pays the same as the poor man.

The NDP gleefully, though with questionable logic, points to this utterance as proof that the health minister opposes the principle of the present voluntary plan.

It's not true, however, to say that rich and poor are treated alike because those with less than $1,000 taxable income will receive government grants.

This basic fact is the biggest cause of the NDP complaint about what it terms "means test" medicare.

But if it is to integrate with a national medicare program just two years from now, it seems obvious that some major revisions must be carried out while our plan is in operation.

That is, unless Premier Bennett hopes with the assistance of other provinces, to win some major concessions from Ottawa in the meantime.

This seems unlikely. So, let's start making adjustments in our plans, without delaying the present scheme, but starting with a transfer of responsibility to the health department.

Cultural Rebirth

Romania Strides To Nationalism

By HENRY SHAPIRO, from Bucharest

Slowly, methodically and irrevocably the Romanians are removing the last remnants of Russian cultural influence.

Nothing strikes a visitor who has not been here since 1961 more than the disappearance of Russian language signs at the airport, the changes of Russian names of streets into Romanian ones, the absence of Russian book stores and the scarcity of Soviet plays and films.

Striking out for cultural as well as economic and political independence from the Soviet bloc the Communist authorities are encouraging a strong form of Romanian nationalism reminiscent of that of Romania at the height of the Stalin era.

The process of de-Russification goes on non-stop.

It is apparent in such minor matters as the revision of the role of orthography to eliminate the slightest influence of Russian spelling from Romania's Latin alphabet.

De-Russification has gone so far as to erase street signs with the name of Marshal Iven Tolbuchin, who drove the Germans out of Romania during the Second World War.

Tolbuchin Boulevard, one of the capital's principal main squares named after the Russian soldier who is still revered in this country, became Boulevard of the Republic.

But the army has long been nurtured by the royal family and stands at the core of the king's strength. Indeed, the army seems ready to move in, to set up a form of dictatorship if chaos destroys the existing form of democracy.

The monarch in the royal family is that Papadrou and his son, Andreas, may be too heavily influenced by left-wingers.

Papadrou maintains the real issue is one of constitutional rights: "The king reigns, the people rule. The king advises, the government decides."

He feels the existing administration will collapse on Friday and that the king will be forced to call him back. With his own prestige and authority at stake, the king is unlikely to bow to Papadrou's wishes.

In the country's present emotional state, anything can happen. A mistake or accident on the part of the army or those playing on the emotions of the crowds can create another tragedy that is bound to leave its mark on the Greek throne.

Must Work For Britain Says Wilson

LONDON (UPI)—Prime Minister Harold Wilson Saturday announced a half-a-century economic campaign to show business leaders the need to work for their country as well as themselves.

"We are going to bring home to complacent and prosperous manufacturers the need to get off their bottoms and work for Britain," Wilson told a Labor Party rally in Newton, Wales.

The prime minister said he was determined "at any cost" to get Britain moving economically both at home and abroad.

He promised further cuts in public spending.

Wilson said he would announce shortly "further measures to make more effective the discipline of control over public expenditure—both nationally and locally—and to give direct assistance to our exports."

"I must make it clear if the government is challenged in the determination to rid industry of squalid practices, the government will accept the challenge no matter what the cost," he asserted.

The opposition Conservative party, traditional stronghold of the British business community, is searching for a dynamic new leader to replace Sir Alex Douglas-Home, party leader and Only four years ago when I last visited here Russian was a compulsory language in the schools. Now it is an optional subject and its place is rapidly being taken by English and French.

Two years ago the Romanians rejected the Khrushchev brand of economic integration in the Communist bloc, they also closed the renowned Gorki Institute for the study of Russian.

A Soviet book store was shut and the annual Romanian-Soviet Friendship month is no longer observed.

Russian films, plays and radio programs which dominated the Romanian stage and air-waves have gradually been replaced by Western attractions.

Modern American jazz and Broadway musical hits are increasingly heard on Bucharest radios and recently band leader Louis Armstrong, whom the Russians refused to permit in Moscow, received a triumphal reception here.

Ideologically, the Romanian leaders remain hard line Marxist Communists, but it appears to be a Communism neither of Moscow nor Peking style, but strictly national Romanian.

Russia's break with Communist China has been ardently used by Romanian leaders to achieve a unique form of neutrality among ruling Communist parties. They have gone a long step ahead of Tito's Yugoslavia which is as much in Peking's doghouse as the Soviet Union.

No charges of heresy and treason to Marxism are heard against Romania by China although this country is no less committed to peaceful co-existence and accommodation with the West than Russia itself.

And post-Khrushchevian Russia remains restrained and silent in the face of resurgent Romanian nationalism.

The country's growing independence from Moscow was last shown in Romania's refusal to attend a 19-party conference in the Soviet capital in March.

Robert chats with car executive about his new sports model

Boy Earns New Sports Car

DETROIT (AP)—An Alaskan youth who rode a bicycle 4,100 miles to the Motor City to buy a new car, is enjoying auto industry hospitality usually reserved for dignitaries.

Robert Gregory Layman, 16, left his Anchorage home 40 days ago. His father promised to buy him a new sports car if he completed the trip.

Robert arrived here early this week and moved into the home of a Ford Motor Co. parts buyer, Robert Treglow, whom he met on his trip.

"I told him I was going to buy a General Motors car," Robert said.

But Treglow promptly introduced him to Ford executives and thereby touched off a small rivalry with GM.

Ford gave the lad a grand tour of its Detroit area plants and introduced Layman to its Ochs sports car.

But General Motors meanwhile had placed an order with its St. Louis assembly plant for a car to meet Robert's specifications. Then General Motors took over Robert's tour of the auto industry. And he was given a 1965 car to drive during his stay in Detroit.

Friday, Robert toured GM's plants in Flint, Mich. Layman is scheduled to receive his new car next week. He plans to start his homeward trek shortly afterwards.

From Horseshoe to Heavy Equipment

New Public Company Had Humble Start

By HARRY YOUNG
Business Editor

A Nanaimo blacksmith shop which began life making shoes for horses pulling logs along shid roads is now a public company rated the most successful Canadian manufacturer of heavy logging equipment.

S. Madill Ltd. is a story of family enterprise that runs back over 60 years and stamps the Canadian west as the land of opportunity for those who have forethought and courage.

The blacksmith shop operated by the late Sam Madill grew into a machine shop with an expanding business in the forest and mining industries.

SHIPBUILDING
In 1948, Samuel Madill and his two sons Chuck and Norman, acquired the Nanaimo shipbuilding company of Newcastle Ship Building Co. Ltd., which had been formed in 1942 to build minesweepers and other small craft for the Canadian navy.

The name was changed from Newcastle Ship Building Co. to S. Madill Ltd., and the Madill machine shop business was amalgamated with the new firm.

LOGGING
Under its new ownership the shipbuilding business was continued but it became more and more obvious to the Madill family that the big future of the company was in servicing the logging industry.

The plant was expanded for the manufacture of heavy equipment for an industry that was quickly becoming mechanized and automated.

At this time the B.C. logging industry was being forced to buy U.S. equipment because no such manufacturing facilities or experienced personnel to make them were in existence in Canada.

MOBILE SPAR

The big forward move in the Madill company fortunes occurred in 1958 when it applied for and later obtained a patent in Canada and the United States for the Madill mobile spar tree, now the company's principal product.

The Madill Mobile spar trees handled over 3,000,000 board feet of lumber in 1964, and they monopolize the spar tree market in B.C. to the extent of 90 per cent of the total.

BOOM BOATS

While the spar trees account for about 80 per cent of the sales of Madill, the company is also a patented manufacturer of logging yarders and boom boats.

Charles Madill who is now president of S. Madill Ltd. says that he expects his firm's business to double within the next few years, and it was to be in a position to meet the demand that the decision was made recently to convert the company into a public one to raise the capital that would be needed.

APPROVAL

This company has now been approved and next week the company will issue 40,000 new preferred shares of $10 par each, and warrants to purchase a similar number of common shares.

Lou Williams, Victoria investment dealer, is a director of the new company and his firm says that the demand for the new shares is so great that only a part of the orders can be met.

Most of the shareholders will be people on Vancouver Island who know the Madills and their products and have faith in their ability to succeed.

EXPANSION

The new preferred shares will pay a dividend of 6 1/2 per cent and they will be offered along with a share for share warrant to purchase common shares at $2.50 up to June 1966 and at $3.50 up to June 1967.

The proceeds to the company will be $430,000, and this will be used to retire a bank loan of $145,000, to enlarge the manufacturing plant at Nanaimo at a cost of $200,000 with another $55,000 to be applied to the general funds of the company.

PROFIT PICTURE

The company's year ends on June 30, and the unaudited figures for 1965 show that sales rose to a record $3,941,605, leaving a net profit of $151,400 after allowing $134,132 for depreciation and $125,867 for income tax.

The profit is equal to just over 50 cents on each of the new common shares.

SOLID BASE

The 1965 figures compare with sales of $2,351,288 and net profit of $106,949 in 1964 and of $1,295,109 and $72,942 in 1960.

The chart of the company's growth indicates that President Chuck Madill's estimate that the company's sales will double in the next few years is based on solid grounds.

MORE TAX TO PAY

Provincial taxes in British Columbia have not changed this year, but vacationists moving around the country this summer will find that in most provinces (and also in the United States) local taxes are on the rise.

In Canada two provinces (Manitoba and Quebec) and the Northwest Territories have increased their gasoline taxes from a year ago, says CCH Canadian Ltd., the tax and business reporting service.

These same two provinces also increased their cigarette tax, but there was some relief in Saskatchewan where the sales tax levy has dropped from five to four per cent.

Every province collects gasoline tax varying between 19 cents and 7 1/2 cents a gallon. Four provinces—B.C., Alberta, Saskatchewan and Ontario do not have a cigarette tax, and only two—Alberta and Manitoba are without a sales tax.

The provincial taxes are:

	Gas per gallon	Excise Tax	Retail Cigarettes per pack
British Columbia	.12	9¢	—
Alberta	.12	—	—
Saskatchewan	.12	—	—
Manitoba	.12	—	—
Ontario	.12	—	—
Quebec	.12	—	—
New Brunswick	.12	—	—
New Scotia	.12	—	—
P.E.I.	.12	—	—
N.W.T.	.12	—	—
Yukon	.12	—	—

CCH says that Quebec's six per cent sales tax is the highest in either Canada or the United States while the 19 cents a gallon gasoline tax in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland is also the highest on the North American continent.

GAS TAXES

In the U.S. where gasoline taxes are generally considerably lower than in Canada, the upward trend is also in evidence. Eight states including California increased their gasoline taxes this year, and California paying 8 cents a U.S. gallon is now equal top in that country with Alaska.

Tobacco taxes are heavy in most states. In Washington and Texas the rate is highest at 11 cents a pack of 20.

Friday, Robert toured GM's plants in Flint, Mich.

Layman is scheduled to receive his new car next week. He plans to start his homeward trek shortly afterwards.

And one big problem has been solved—his bicycle won't fit in his new sports car.

It will be shipped back to Anchorage at the expense of another Detroit firm.

Election Rumble

Gold Bar Prices Rocket

PARIS (Reuters) — One-kilo gold ingots Saturday reached the highest price here since the "gold rush" of last January.

The demand followed press speculation about devaluation of pound sterling and a possible British general election as a result of Sir Alec Douglas-Home's resignation as Conservative party leader.

Turnover of one-kilo ingots on the Paris gold market doubled on 1 1/2 tons compared with Thursday. The price rose 10 francs ($2 U.S.) to 5,580 francs ($1,110 U.S.).

LONDON (Reuters) — The price of gold soared to its highest level in three months on the London exchange Saturday.

General demand for gold forced the closing price up to 233 shillings ($35.28 U.S.) an ounce, a rise of one penny (one cent) for the day. This made a price rise of 3 1/2 pence (four cents) for the week.

Ford Company

Safety Features Listed

WASHINGTON (CP) — Ford automobiles coming out this fall—the 1966 models—will have 14 of the 17 safety devices the United States government now demands on vehicles it buys.

Ford President Arjay Miller, getting a much less critical reception than his two major competitors and even a few bouquets, gave this information Wednesday to the Senate subcommittee which is considering the case for federal regulation of traffic safety.

TESTIFIED FIRST

General Motors and Chrysler testified first and got rough rides on their approaches to safety devices. Committee chairman Abraham Ribicoff (Dem.-Conn.) and Robert Kennedy (Dem.-N.Y.) were particularly biting.

Six Drown In Flood

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Six persons, including a baby in his crib, were drowned when floods struck before dawn in several east Tennessee counties.

Miller said that Ford expects to increase spending on safety this year to near the $138,000,000 mark, and he said Ford has done a lot of pioneering work. But he also said there should be a federal research program which Ford would support and it should also cover the need for better roads, better drivers and better law enforcement.

He said Ford's 1966 models will have seven features—which until now have been optional additions—as standard equipment. These will be rear-seat safety belts, padded instrument panels and sun visors, outside rear-view mirrors, backing lights and four-way emergency flashing lights to use as warnings that the car had broken down or parked.

Canadian Manufacturers

Backlog of Unfilled Orders Growing Faster Than 1964

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian manufacturers had a backlog of unfilled orders that grew twice as fast in May as their shipments compared with a year earlier.

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported Friday that shipments in May were estimated at a total value of $2,806,400,000, an increase of 8.1 per cent over May shipments last year.

But unfilled orders of manufacturers' books in May this year were valued at $3,040,600,000, an increase of 17.2 per cent from the comparable figure for May, 1964.

SHIPMENTS UP

Shipments in May this year were up 2.1 per cent from April shipments and brought the cumulative total for the first five months of this year to $13,302,800,000, an increase of nearly five per cent from the corresponding 1964 total.

Total inventory held by manufacturers in May was estimated at $5,636,900,000, fractionally higher than in April and 6.4 per cent higher than in May, 1964. Of this, inventory owned by the manufacturers in May was estimated at $5,341,100,000, a slight increase over the April estimate and 7.2 per cent higher than the May, 1964, estimate.

ADJUSTED ESTIMATE

DES said its seasonally adjusted estimate of total inventories showed an increase of seven-tenths of one per cent, concentrated in raw materials and goods in process. Finished goods in inventory were only three-tenths of one per cent greater.

New orders placed with Canadian manufacturers in May were valued at an estimated $2,781,500,000. This was a fractional increase over new orders in April but 6.7 per cent higher than new orders placed in May, 1964.

Using its statistical techniques to smooth out seasonal fluctuations, the bureau reported that the level of unfilled orders in May this year was unchanged from the previous month, and there was a decline of nearly four per cent in new orders received during the month.

Manufacturers' shipments increased in May over a year ago in all provinces except New Brunswick. The greatest increase was in Newfoundland, up 21.4 per cent.

British Columbia's gains were in foods and beverages, wood industries and transportation equipment.

Nova Scotia enjoyed advances in foods, beverages and transportation equipment, and Quebec had gains in wood, paper and allied products, and primary metals.

Ontario recorded gains in primary metals, machinery, transportation equipment and chemical products industries. Manitoba made small gains in machinery, Saskatchewan in foods and beverages and primary metals, and Alberta in the wood, metal fabricating and petroleum and coal industries.

Noises Off Greet Rent Hike

By PATRICK O'NEILL

Rent is going up at McPherson Playhouse. City officials have not announced the amount of the increase, which will probably vary depending on the group wishing to use the theatre.

But some groups have already had an indication of the trend: Jerry Gosley, who took an option on the McPherson for his Smile Show next July, says the increase will probably keep him out of the theatre. Even though he is turning away customers at the smaller Langham Court this year.

Kenneth Gravenor blames an increase from $10 rent to $25 daily for his cancellation of lunch-time concerts at the theatre. The concerts will be revived briefly in connection with Show.

Not Yet Approved

While various groups have been told the rent is being changed, it has not been approved yet by city council.

Mr. Young said Playhouse manager Jack Morgan, who is presently on holiday, has been examining the rent structure of other theatres on the Pacific Coast, and plans to make adjustments.

This will mean, for most groups, an increase in the rent charged for week nights, and possibly a small decrease in weekend rental.

But the actual figures will not be made public until the matter comes before the council.

Fewer Services

Mr. Gravenor criticized other aspects of Playhouse operation. He said the theatre management is cutting down on services offered to groups performing there.

The noon concert promoter said there is a lack of promotion of events by the management, despite the fact that in some cases the theatre gets a percentage of the attendance.

"There must be a constant flow of people through the Playhouse; there should be art shows, promotions, special events, anything that will bring the public in."

Mr. Mannering commented: "If there is an effort to increase rent and at the same time cut services, it could hurt groups using the theatre."

Bastion has 70 bookings at the theatre this year.

The artistic director said, "We are operating at a loss anyway, this may increase our problems."

He added, "I think it is too soon for the Playhouse to start cutting its losses in this way."

Bastion Theatre, which is trying to find a professional company resident in the Playhouse without direct city subsidy, has considered the low rent at the Playhouse as a subsidy.

Groups hoping to make more use of the Playhouse in its first full season of operation, are waiting anxiously to hear how the new rent structure will affect them.

'Mousetrap' Club Forms

LONDON (CP)—A club has been formed of actors who played in The Mousetrap, by Agatha Christie, London's longest-running play. The first club tie will be worn by Richard Attenborough, who played the lead when the play opened 13 years ago.

New Centre Hires Moore

TORONTO (CP)—Mavor Moore, Toronto theatrical producer, has been hired as artistic director of the proposed $2,300,000 St. Lawrence Centre for the Arts, the Toronto Arts Foundation announced here. Moore has been artistic director of the Fathers of Confederation Memorial Theatre in Charlottetown since it opened last year.

Rapid Transit Bill Carried

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate has passed and sent to the House of Representatives a bill to authorize a $300,000,000 program to develop and test a high-speed rail system between Washington and Boston. The bill would allow the federal government to take passengers and vehicles off the highways.

Trifles Treated Delightfully

By IAN ARROL

The joys and despairs associated with love, marriage, witching, eating and smoking were lightly and delightfully treated 16th century style in the University of Victoria presentation Saturday night of These Trifling Toys.

This was entertainment number two in Renaissance 65 which followed last Thursday's New Music Sound and which precedes next Tuesday's Touche of Sweet Harmony all in the Student Union Building.

GENTLE TREATMENT
Typical of the trifles Saturday—Sing Sweetly of Tobacco by singer Martin Chambers with gentle harpsichord, violin and cello accompaniment.

Festival Mirror To Renaissance

University of Victoria holds a mirror up to the Renaissance this summer, reflecting drama, poetry, music, mime, and other features of Elizabethan culture.

The festival of night and sound began Thursday with New Music Sound, a program of Elizabethan music.

Last night, an audience was entertained by a program with the intriguing name These Trifling Toys.

This turned out to be a program of readings and dancing, which included mime, parody, and satire.

STRONG PLAYS
But there is no doubt about the titles of the feature presentations of the festival: two strong plays reflecting the Renaissance as viewed by those involved in it, and the period as viewed from our modern age.

First play to be presented is author Robert Bolt's look at the Renaissance period, A Man for All Seasons.

This play, concerned with the moral conflict that faced Henry VIII's minister Sir Thomas More, has had showings in theatres around the world.

It deals with the refusal to compromise of philosopher and statesman More, in the face of the king's demand that he sanction a royal marriage.

TWELFTH NIGHT
The second play is Shakespeare's Twelfth Night, a play typical of its time, though set in a mythical kingdom by the author.

Richard Digby Day, imported from England for the festival, directs Twelfth Night, while Carl Hare of Victoria directs A Man for All Seasons.

Licence, Rings Flushed Away

EINDHOVEN, Holland (UPI)—Police were summoned to quell a dispute between a laborer and his fiancée here.

The feuding couple, it developed, had torn up their marriage licence and flushed their wedding rings down the toilet.

Harbor Project At Rotterdam

ROTTERDAM, The Netherlands (AP)—The Netherlands plans to spend $100,000,000 to improve facilities in Rotterdam harbor, the world's busiest port with traffic of about 30,000 ships a year.

Sweet Touches of Harmony is presented July 27.

A Man for All Seasons will open in the new theatre but July 28.

MORE MUSIC
Music with Her Silver Sound will be presented August 2.

The second major production, Twelfth Night, opens August 3 at the theatre hut.

The Mask of Folly will be seen August 9, and Sweet Airs and Minstrelsy is presented August 23.

Canada Sending 240 to U.K. Festival

LONDON (CP) — Canada is to send 240 performers to the Commonwealth arts festival this fall—the largest group of artists ever to go from one country to another for a single festival.

It will be the first appearance in Europe for Canada's four participating ensembles—the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, the Theatre du Nouveau Monde of Montreal, the Royal Winnipeg Ballet and the Fests-Polles.

BIGGEST ENTRY

The 16-day festival starts Sept. 16, Canada is making the largest contribution of the 17 Commonwealth countries taking part.

Sir Laurence Olivier, head of Britain's National theatre and a member of the Commonwealth Arts Festival Council, has turned over the National Theatre premises, formerly the Old Vic, to the Montreal drama company for their two-week season.

TOUR PLANNED

The Royal Winnipeg Ballet and the Fests-Polles will both appear at London's Piccadilly Theatre. The ballet, with a repertoire of a dozen short ballets, nearly all modern, will give four performances in the capital and then move on to the provinces.

Other events in London include an exhibition of Commonwealth art treasures at the Royal Academy, in which Canada will play the biggest part with 600 exhibits representing the cream of the country's paintings, sculpture and handicrafts.

Maria Varrs

Performance Of Piano On Monday

Maria Varrs, pianist, will present a free public recital at 8 p.m. Monday in the Student Union Building at the University of Victoria.

The recital is under sponsorship of La Maison Française, the university's new civil French summer school. Miss Varrs is the wife of Dr. Claude Trell, director of the school.

Tradesmen To March

QUEBEC CITY (UPI) — A third march on the legislature in two weeks has been slated by more than 1,000 Quebec City and district plumbers and electricians. The men are marching to back up demands for recognition of the Fraternity of Plumbers and Electricians as their union.

They have been on strike since Monday.

In Warehouse

Tourists Unearth Stars' Treasures

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Entering tourists are learning that some of filmland's most interesting treasures are not on the studio lots, but in storage company warehouses.

One company took inventory of its stock recently and found it had on-hand Alfred Hitchcock's cases of Swiss apple cider, Janet Gaynor's collection of antique furniture and Marlene Dietrich's wardrobe.

If the company ever opens its doors for tours, it could also show an authentic Tahitian hut belonging to the late Nat King Cole, gold-inlaid furniture of the late King Farouk and the David O. Selznick Studios' costume collection, including garb worn in Gone With the Wind.

Naturally, the company would be worried about breakage. So if you get inside, be careful with Jerry Lewis' 14-by-11 foot train board that runs six electric trains at once and Elizabeth

Welsh Choir Coming

A Welsh male choir of 80 voices is expected to perform in Victoria September 15.

Promoter Kenneth Gravenor said the Pwllheli Male Choir from Rhondda Valley in South Wales is making a trip across Canada to see the country.

They will probably be booked into a Victoria theatre, asking only that their expenses be paid.

The conductor of the choir is Glyn Jones.

Mr. Gravenor said the concert site has not yet been decided.

Prices Too High?

If Ever It Comes, Follow the Band

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Department of National Defence, which spends more than $1,000,000 every year, is asking city council for a $500 subsidy.

In a letter to council, the department asked the city to waive its usual rental charge for two nights at the Queen Elizabeth Theatre.

The department wants to present band concerts by the 80-member North American Air Defence Command Band from Colorado Springs August 19-20.

If the city won't provide the theatre free of charge, said the letter read Friday, the concert will go to Malkin Bowl in Stanley Park—that is free.

And if Malkin Bowl isn't available for nothing, the band won't come to Vancouver at all on those dates and will only perform a previously-scheduled concert at the Pacific National Exhibition, said the letter.

The main purpose of the concert is to promote recruiting for the Air Force.

City council will decide next Tuesday.

It's fun to be in the swim at Elk Lake Colonist classes

Former Pupil Says Hello

Young Swimmers Progress At Colonist Classes

By MARGIE NAYSMITH

The third week went well. We have about three-quarters of the children gliding and kicking, and one or two groups are kicking and arm-stroking.

We have been stretching and breathing out while this is going on.

One boy explained it very well when he said, "I can kick and breathe or arm-stroke and breathe, but I sure can't do all three at one time."

A GOOD QUESTION

"How come I can walk swimming my arms and keep breathing?" I consider this a good question. I just wish I had a good answer.

I have found over the years that boys seem to be able to kick and breathe out faster than girls. On the other hand, the girls seem in general to arm-stroke and breathe out more readily.

Also children that are water shy have difficulty gliding without the use of arms and legs, but if they are taught to use their arms, it helps.

ARM ACTION

I feel this is because your arms are your survival unit. You use them to hold on if you are falling, and also to ward off anything that might be falling on you.

So when we ask those who are having difficulty gliding to paddle with their arms, quite often they will be able to do this. Next week we will be teaching back floating to the beginners and breast-stroking to the swimmers.

Train Robbery

Four Men Charged In Escape

LONDON (UPI) — Four men accused of conspiring to help great train robber Ronald Biggs escape from jail two weeks ago, were remanded in custody Saturday until Aug. 2.

The quartet—truckdriver Paul Sanborne, 37; bricklayer Joseph Murrin, 23; mechanic George Lowe, 27, and milkman George Biggs, 39—had been picked up in a series of police raids this week in London and neighboring Kent County.

CONSPIRACY

They were charged with "conspiring with others between July 3 and July 8 to aid the escape of persons lawfully detained in Wandsworth Prison," in South London.

Biggs, serving a 30-year jail term for his part in the $7,300,000 Royal Mail train robbery Aug. 8, 1963, escaped July 8.

A man who parked his car improperly on Yates late Friday appeared in city magistrate's court Saturday morning and paid a $350 fine.

Omer Richard Robinson, HMCS Naden, pleaded guilty to being in care or control of a vehicle while impaired.

Police picked him up at 12:05 p.m. Saturday after he had parked his car improperly on Yates near Blanshard and left the motor running. A subsequent breathalyzer test showed a .21 per cent reading.

As well as fining the man, Magistrate Harold Alder suspended his license for six months.

Roy Mitchell, 611 Fernhill, who pleaded guilty to careless driving, was fined $75.

'We Can't Wait'

Chicago Drive

CHICAGO (UPI)—Dr. Martin Luther King carried his "We Can't Wait" weekend integration campaign to Chicago churches and street corners Saturday, promising "we will change this city."

The three-day drive here signalled the start of a summer invasion of northern cities by representatives of King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC) in an effort to break down racial barriers.

The first five rallies of the day drew an estimated total of 2,300 persons.

COMMUNISTS

At his second stop today in Allgood Gardens, a Second World War housing project on the far South Side which proclaims on signboards that it is the "Garden Spot of Chicago," among a crowd of about 50 were white pickets. One had a car with a sign reading: "See picture of Martin Luther King with the Communists."

Other pickets had placards hinting that Communists were involved in the protest movement here.

Mayor Richard J. Daley charged June 30 at a press conference that "Many of the people that are marching are Communists... the police department files show this is true." Protest leaders denied the charge, but on July 2 Illinois Communist leaders said there were Communists in the demonstrations.

Bingo Bachelor Wins Honors

MATLOCK, England (UPI) — Graham Jepson, 21, a sociology student at the Sheffield University, has won his Bachelor of Arts degree — with honors in bingo.

"My tutor looked amazed when I chose bingo to study," Graham said, "but it is one of the most popular forms of gambling in Britain." In the course of researching his specialty, Graham confessed, "I almost became an addict myself."

Lions' Good Schedule May Crack Gate Mark

Colt Leaguers Host Regionals

One of the biggest minor league baseball tournaments ever held in Victoria will run Aug. 4-8 at Royal Athletic Park, when Victoria Colt League plays host to the regional tournament.

As host club, the local Colt League all-stars get an automatic berth. One other B.C. representative will be named at a tournament starting Thursday in Penticton, and Washington, Oregon, and Hawaii will send one team each.

B.C. TEAMS START

Victoria and the B.C. representatives meet in the first game of the double-elimination event Aug. 4 at 8 p.m. Washington plays Oregon Aug. 5 at 2 p.m., and Hawaii meets the winner between the two B.C. teams Aug. 5 at 6 p.m.

Winner advances to the divisional tournament at Ulfah, Cal.

The city of Victoria is installing extra seats at Royal Athletic Park for the event, which should bring capacity up to about 1,500. Admission will be 75 cents for adults and 25 cents for students and pensioners.

Marr Ahead At Hartford

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP)—Dave Marr, a 31-year-old Texan, moved into the 54-hole lead Saturday in the $70,000 Insurance City Open Golf Tournament.

Marr, who started the third round with 134, finished with three birdies on the last five holes for a 70 and a nine-under-par total of 204.

There were three players one stroke off the pace—Johnny Port, Tom Weiskopf and Bob Goalby, the 18-hole leader.

Andrews Wins, Loses In Rifle Shoot-Offs

Eric Andrews of 5th RCA won the Navy Cup and failed by only one point to make a clean sweep of the available trophies in the first day's shooting in the Victoria and District Rifle Association's annual two-day meet at Hazel's range yesterday.

Andrews, who leads the aggregate scoring by five points in a field of more than twenty, shot his way out of a four-way tie with Jim Hatter, Bob Walker and Chuck Holmes, all with 512 for the Navy Trophy.

Earlier in the day, Andrews dropped the President's Cup, 22-21, in a shoot-off with Fran Morris of CSRA after each scored 551-100 at the 200 and 300 yard rounds.

Up for grabs in today's shooting is the F. W. Francis Trophy

Munn Loses in Playoff Misses $200,000 Meet

VANCOUVER — Dick Munn of Victoria just missed winning a berth in the World Open golf tournament here yesterday while Al Mengert of Tacoma was rolling in with a 68 to win the B.C. Open.

Munn, getting a break when Vancouver's Al Nelson blew to a last-round 63, shot a 74 yesterday to tie Vancouver's Lyle Crawford and Len Collett as low Canadian scorers at 216.

The three went on to a sudden-death playoff for the Canadian spot in the $200,000 World Open in Sutton, Mass., and Collett settled it early, winning with the only par of the first playoff hole.

Crawford and Collett had both shot last-round 72s, and shared seventh place with Munn in the B.C. tourney. Nelson, the host pro who had fired rounds of 70 and 68, wound up tied for 10th place at 220.

MENGERT BUNS AWAY

But this tournament belonged to Mengert, the Tacoma pro who was a marvel of consistency throughout the 54 holes. He opened with a 67, then strung consecutive 68s for a three-stroke victory over Vancouver amateur Johnny Johnston, who matched him in the final two rounds but could never make up ground lost with his opening day 70 although it was two under par.

First-round leader Tom Storey, an amateur from Seattle, shot a 71 yesterday for third place at 210, one stroke better than Tacoma pro Al Feldman.

Two highly-regarded B.C. players finished far off the pace. Vancouver pro Stan Leonard, the pre-tournament favorite, shot a 72 yesterday for a 218 total and Bill Wakeham, the former Victoria amateur now playing professionally out of Calgary, had a 74 for 225.

Football Charges Monopoly Suggest Massive Fan Action

VANCOUVER (CP) — Live televised football appears to be impossible in Western Canada this fall unless fans make a massive protest through their members of parliament, the television committee of the Western Football Conference said Friday night.

The committee said "monopolistic" practices of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and Canadian Television Networks are to blame for an impasse in negotiations to televise WFC games.

"Obstruction" — The network had "obstructed" efforts of the Montreal advertising firm which owns the rights and is trying to get an agreement for coverage.

The committee said in a formal statement that the public must demand cancellation or modification of a monopolistic 1963 agreement between CBC and CTV which requires them to share football rights.

"This agreement effectively eliminates competition by assuring each network that it may participate in football regardless of who acquires the rights," said the committee.

DON'T WANT BOTH —

The advertising firm, Bouchard, Champagne, Pelletier Ltd. (BCP), "have sponsors who wish to participate in football on one network but who do not wish to buy time on both networks."

14 Daily Colonist Victoria, B.C., Sun., July 25, 1965

"Because of the network agreement, however, BCP must pay for time on both networks and this they have been unable to do."

The committee said the network has obstructed BCP efforts by:

Delaying the price estimate for 1965 CBC telecasting until May of this year;

Increasing total network costs by $300,000 since 1964;

Each exercising a veto over arrangements which BCP attempted to make with the other;

Requiring BCP to secure in advance total network TV charges amounting to $1,400,000, a condition never before imposed in comparable circumstances. The committee said this demand is not required of the holder of National Football League rights in the United States.

The claim by CBC that BCP paid too much for the WFC television rights last year was "simply not correct." BCP had offered the rights to sponsors at a price only $40,000 higher than 1964, while the networks' production charges were more than $200,000 higher. Both increases would have to be passed on to the sponsors.

Members of the television committee are B.C. Lions' general manager Herb Capozzi and vice-president Allan McEachern, and manager-coach Bud Grant of Winnipeg Blue Bombers.

Extension Opens Thursday

Kiwanis Village Expands To Meet Desperate Need

By JIM BRAHAN

Another step in humanitarian work will be marked by the Kiwanis Club of Victoria on Tuesday, when the new addition to Kiwanis Village is formally opened by Lieutenant-Governor George Pearkes.

The addition of 27 rooms to the villa, at Elmwood Village, Cook and Lang Streets, is part of a continuing project undertaken by the service club to provide low rental housing for the elderly in the community.

With the new addition the villa can now accommodate 79 persons. In addition to a furnished private bed-sitting room, residents enjoy convenience of a dining room for 100 persons, modern kitchen facilities, library, handicrafts room, four sun lounges, patios and a large, beautifully landscaped courtyard.

Rent for accommodation in the villa is $32 per month which includes room and board.

WAITING LIST

For those who wish to tend to their own needs Kiwanis village offers 34 double and 16 single units renting at $25 and $18.50 a month, plus heat, light and water. All are now occupied and there is an extensive waiting list.

In May, 1952 the Kiwanis Village Society of Victoria was founded after an extensive study of the needs of elderly married couples in this area who were known to be living on small fixed incomes.

With the aid of grants from the provincial government the first six units of the village were built, and were occupied in July 1953.

After a further study of the needs of elderly single persons the directors of the society decided to develop plans to meet their requirements.

Land adjacent to the village was acquired and the Kiwanis Villa was built to provide low cost accommodation for elderly widows, widowers, and single persons who live on limited incomes.

The great appreciation by Greater Victoria residents for the Kiwanis project is shown by the total investment in the villa and village which now stands at $370,000, the source being from contributions of the citizens, the City of Victoria, merchants and contractors, as well as grants from the province and the Kiwanis Club.

BLITZ CAMPAIGN

The Kiwanis Club of Victoria holds its annual one-hour-blitz fund raising campaign in December.

"Victorians are more than generous during this drive for funds," said club spokesman R. M. Lohndberg. "We usually receive more than $75,000 during each campaign. The donations are usually small, but they certainly add up."

He pointed out that the project was a non-charity one and that the society was a non-profit organization.

"The tenants pay a low monthly rent which permits them to enjoy their retirement years in dignity," he said.

The society has received many enquiries about the villa and village from the other provinces as well as from many points in the United States.

The Kiwanis Club of Victoria is living up to the club motto: "We build."

If Tax Rebated

Gas Cost Could Be Lower

VANCOUVER (CP) — Inland Natural Gas Co. said Saturday that further reductions in natural gas rates could result from a proposal by the federal government to reduce taxes on private utilities.

Inland supplies natural gas to customers from Hudson Hope south through the Okanagan and into the Okanagan and West Kootenay areas.

The firm already has proposed a rate reduction that could save residential and commercial customers more than $1,000,000 over the next three years, said president John McMahon.

A PUC hearing on these reductions will be held shortly. The city of Prince George wants Inland to make greater reductions.

Mr. McMahon was commenting on an Ottawa announcement that the federal government will return to the provinces almost the entire tax collected from private utilities.

The government has said it hopes the provinces will in turn give the money back to the firms as they would be on an equal footing with government-owned utilities, such as B.C. Hydro, which are not taxed.

Crooks Create Stamp 'Rarities'

By FAITH ANGUS

A few genuine "minting color" errors are known to exist among the hundreds of 1954 Australian Christmas stamps that have been discovered with the red portion entirely missing but the rest of the stamp in perfect condition.

It has been proved that the red ink used in printing the stamps is highly soluble and can be removed by floating in water or exposure to chemicals or sunlight.

Several cases have been reported where these methods have been deliberately used and the faded stamps offered for sale as rarities.

The genuine errors were probably caused by the easing of pressure on the ink rollers during printing.

Two new series of Malaysian stamps which will replace those of the states of Malaya, Singapore, Sarawak and Sabah will be on a national and state basis. The national series depicting native birds in full color will be in eight denominations and is expected to be released in September. The state series of seven denominations showing orchids, also in full color, will be released in October.

The stamp originally scheduled for release by Monaco on May 17, to celebrate the birth of Princess Stephanie, has been postponed next February, the first anniversary of her birth. A different design will be used but it will remain a 3fr. airmail stamp.

Malta will mark the fourth anniversary of the great wartime siege on Sept. 1st, with a set of stamps (values 2s., 3s., 6s., 8s., 1s., 1/4 and 3/6) dealing with historical subjects connected with the siege.

The U.S. Department of the Interior has announced that a revised Fish and Wildlife Circular III, Duck Stamp Data, is available from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402, for 25 cents. The 40-page booklet illustrates and describes the 22 attractive hunting stamps issued to date.

Prince Edward Islands floral emblem commemorative stamp scheduled for release on Aug. 4 was issued on Wednesday, July 21.

Ruthless War for Land

Whites Slaughter Indians in Brazil

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (CNS) — Brazilian Indians face the threat of extermination at the hands of white men who reportedly even strafe them from low-flying aircraft.

Reports of merciless slaughter of Indians have prompted officials of the Indian Protection Service (SPI) to work out a resettlement plan to protect them from white marauders.

Recent reports from various parts of the country show that white are waging open war to drive the Indians from their hunting grounds.

The SPI reports Indians besieged in the north by cattle ranchers and rubber tappers, in east central states by planters and in the south by lumbermen.

In Amazonas, missionary Father Carlos Walsen showed photographs of Indians slain by whites seeking to steal reservation land. He called the killings "atrocious genocide."

A band of exterminators was reported in the pay of cattlemen in Maranhao state. One of the raiders told a priest that all Indians sighted, including women and children, were slain and their bodies left in conspicuous places as a warning to others to vacate.

Gold and diamond prospectors were reported using Cessna aircraft in far western Rondonia territory to strafe and bomb Indians with machine guns and hand grenades.

If present conditions continue, unassimilated Indians will disappear. The Indian population has been reduced from an estimated 500,000 at the time of the discovery of Brazil in 1500 to about 80,000 today.

U.K. Cities May 'Sink'

LONDON (CP) — Several cities in land-short Britain may go underground by the end of this century, says a planning expert. Professor John Kolbuszewski says the cities would show only isolated huge towers above the surface of the earth.

London Bridge Really IS Falling Down

LONDON (Reuters) — London Bridge is falling down.

The city's most historic river crossing, built 134 years ago, is cracking and settling on the bottom of the Thames at the rate of one-eighth of an inch a year, the city corporation has announced.

The corporation plans to replace it with a three-span slender concrete bridge costing £2,400,000 ($7,300,000). If Parliament and the Greater London Council agree—London Bridge is considered an ancient monument—the new structure should be built by 1970 and the existing bridge torn down a year later.

The new bridge will be the fourth to be built on the site. The first was built by the Romans and pulled down by 11th-century Viking raiders.

The second, built in 1176, became the London Bridge of song and legend. The present bridge was opened in 1831.

TORONTO (CP) — An American biochemist said here that a survey has shown that children with poor mouth hygiene had a lower cavity rate than most other children. Dr. Arnold D. Shostberg told the International Association for Dental Research the survey also showed that the cavity rate dropped among children of lower intelligence quotients.

Teeth of 562 boys and girls between the ages of nine and 21 were examined at Lincoln State School, Ill., where IQ levels ranged from 20 to about 80, Dr. Shostberg said. Persons with an IQ of 20 to 50 are regarded as trainable and those with an IQ above 50 as able to be educated.

Mentally defective children — those with provable brain damage or congenital defects — proved to have less tooth decay than children at the school with no brain damage but sub-normal intelligence, he said. Both groups had a lower decay rate than normal children.

The children with poorest oral hygiene, who had much tartar and debris around the teeth, had least decay, he said.

Mongoloid children had the lowest decay rate with an average of .46 decay surfaces each. Next was the defective group with 2.80 decay surfaces and finally the retarded children with a 4.30 average.

They're Softies

Aussie Image Phoney

MELBOURNE (Reuters) — A government official has shattered the popular image of the average Australian as a tough, healthy, sun-bronzed athlete.

The opposite is generally true, he said—Australian city dwellers in particular are softies who eat too much, drink too much and will not walk a block unless they are forced to.

COLONIAL RELIC

Philip Lwa, director of the cultural affairs department's Antarctic division, told a group of young farmers here the toughness image is a relic of colonial days.

He said the number of men rejected for health reasons during the national military service draft—almost one-third—indicates Australian health and fitness standards are getting worse.

Law said the community has a few highly active people engaged in sports, but these are a minority.

$450,000 Hospital To Open

The new $450,000 Aberdeen Private Hospital will officially open Monday.

The 75-bed hospital at 1450 Hillside for the chronically ill, convalescent and elderly patients is ultra modern from its two acres of landscaped grounds to the restful pastel shades used in the interior decorating.

It is intended to have 24-hour graduate nursing care plus the services of a resident doctor, according to administrator Neil de Macedo.

All wards in the hospital, private, semi-private and one containing four beds, will have individual television sets for each patient. The sets are equipped with pillow speakers so not to disturb other patients in the ward.

If a patient desires he may have a private bedside telephone installed.

Other features of the hospital are: A small chapel which will double as a television lounge during weekdays, a station to bedside monitoring system, a dining room capable of seating 30 persons, and space for occupational therapy.

G. H. Wheaton Ltd., was the general contractor for the hospital and Sager and Marshall were the architects.

The New Aberdeen Private Hospital located on Hillside Ave. — a further addition to Victoria's modern medical care facilities. Featured are many advanced patient benefits including 24-hour Registered Nurse Service, Resident Doctor, exclusive Station to bedside monitoring system plus Physio and occupational therapy.

Paris Strike Slows Planes

PARIS (AP) — Most ground-service employees at Orly airport went on strike in a wage dispute and at Le Bourget about half the employees stopped work. Arrival and departure of planes was only slightly affected.

BLAINE, Wash. (AP) — Postmaster Ted Holzhelmer has ordered $10,000 worth of high-denomination postage stamps as a result of the Canadian postal strike.

Businessmen from Canada swamped this border town with mail blocked when Canadian mailmen quit work to back their demands for higher pay.

"I sold $500 worth of $5 stamps to one Vancouver, B.C. man alone, yesterday," Holzhelmer said.

The Canadian mail, rushed to Blaine by trucks and private vehicles, is destined mostly for points in the United States and overseas, Holzhelmer said. "Our business has more than doubled," he said.

Dental Job Hurts Every Bite

KINGSTON, England — The repairs to Frank Clarke's teeth, which he thought were free, have cost him £190 ($532) — plus a 10-day jail sentence for contempt of court. Frank underwent extensive dental work in the belief that it came under the National Health Service. But a county court ruled that he had been a private patient, and ordered him to pay up, in instalments.

The visit to prison followed non-compliance with the order. Frank agreed in court to pay £5 ($14) a month until the bill is paid. "The thought hurts me every time I take a bite," he said.

MIAMI, Fla. — A bust of Ernest Hemingway sculptured by a Russian artist has been unveiled in the house where Hemingway lived near Havana.

BUDAPEST — The Hungarian news agency says Canadian ambassador to Hungary Malcolm Shaw met for the first time with Hungarian Premier Gyula Kallai. The subjects discussed at their meeting were not disclosed.

MILWAUKEE — Gary Garinger was fined $25 for disorderly conduct after police caught him behind a coffee shop carrying a jar of pickles. They said the shop was broken into but Garinger told the court he must have been pickled at the time because he didn't remember anything about it.

OAKVILLE, Ont. — Three Oakville policemen investigated a noisy party and captured the Royal Hamilton Light Infantry. Sgt. Allan Stansbury and Constables Harold Scotland and William Chapman were investigating complaints of a noisy party behind an oil refinery here. They sealed a 20-foot fence, soaked through the grass and pounced on 40 infantrymen. The soldiers were on night exercise and couldn't understand how the police got past their sentries posted around the refinery.

CHICAGO — Marshall Carter received a two-year prison sentence after pleading guilty to trying to sell morticians non-existent bodies. He said he telephoned morticians in Miami and St. Louis and told them he had a body to be shipped to them but needed $200 in advance for freight costs.

NEW DELHI — Officials in India's Punjab State nominated Dev Das for a government post but rescinded the invitation after learning, to their embarrassment, he had died four years ago.

NEW YORK — A baby girl, born in a jet airliner cruising 39,000 feet above the Atlantic, is in fair condition. The child was delivered by a nurse's aide traveling on the plane and three stewardesses. They were guided by radio instructions from Dr. Peter Balle, a passenger on another New York-bound jetliner. The mother, Mrs. Helga Hersek, 22, of Warehousepoint, Conn., was reported in good condition.

SAN DIEGO, Calif. — A big black cat has died at the age of 15 and George Washington University, Washington, D.C., will get his $400,000 estate. The late Dr. William W. Grier of nearby La Jolla left the legacy to the feline, named Helicat when he died two years ago. He stipulated that upon the death of the cat, the money was to go to the university.

DALLAS — See Carter, 60, complained to police that afternoon in the beauty parlor had not helped at all. While she was asleep, a thief crept into her bedroom and stole her recently coiffed wig.

LINCOLN, Neb. — Duane E. Pope, 22, of Kansas, pleaded not guilty to charges he committed the bloody June 4 bank robbery at Big Springs, Neb., in which three bank personnel were slain and another wounded.

HALIFAX — Gerald Egan, Halifax Member of Parliament, has won the leadership of the Nova Scotia Liberal Party by a wide majority. He polled 578 of the 588 votes at the convention.

DAWSON CREEK — Mrs. Margaret (Ma) Murray, weekly newspaper editor from Lillooet, will trade her typewriter for a tiara and a tall tale next month. At 28 she is to be queen of Dawson Creek's Bonanza Days celebration Aug. 12 to 14.

BRISBANE — A book on Australian bookstands written by former Adelaide journalist Keith Wilson, says Michael Rockefeller, explorer-anthropologist son of New York governor Nelson Rockefeller, probably was eaten by cannibals in New Guinea four years ago. Rockefeller, 25, was last seen trying to swim ashore from a drifting raft.

TORONTO — James Cardinal McGuigan, Roman Catholic archbishop of Toronto, is reported recovering rapidly from a stroke he suffered.

Escaping with Loot Still Big Problem

TOKYO (Reuters) — How to get the loot off the premises has always been a thief's problem.

Police say a 20-year-old waitress tried swallowing the loot in a jeweller's store in Fukuoka, west of Tokyo. They say a $30 gold necklace disappeared while the waitress was looking over the stock with two friends.

The girls angrily denied taking it and offered to strip to prove their innocence.

But after two hours of interrogation one girl confessed the other had swallowed the necklace. An X-ray settled the matter.

Buddy-Buddy Strike

By BILL STAUDAL

It must be the most congenial strike in history.

Victoria's striking mailmen insist they have no quarrel with local management. Supervisors held no grudge against the mailmen. Even the public is siding with the strikers.

"The relationship between us and the strikers is first-class; they're not striking against us," said assistant postmaster Dwight Green Saturday.

Said postmaster Allan Davies:

"They're not striking against us. They're striking against the treasury board."

"These are all my friends—fellows I've been working with for 20 years."

Outside the quiet post office, policeman John Watchman, 1200 Chapman Street, agreed:

"It's against the treasury board," he said.

Gerald Kenny, president of Local 248, the Canadian Postal Employees' Association, said the same thing: relations with Victoria management are "excellent."

Mr. Green, the assistant postmaster, reported:

"The public are actually behind the strikers. I've been out front talking to the boys and heard passersby encouraging them."

Many phone callers have been pro-strike, he added.

The initial goodwill of the mail tie-up seems to be based on the feeling that it can't possibly last long.

About 200 mail clerks and letter carriers have set up a makeshift strike headquarters at 1314 Government, half a block from the post office. It's furnished with nothing more than two cots, a few chairs and a table.

All Back Pickets Save Pensioners

Pensioners are already worried about getting their $75 monthly cheques, deliverable this Wednesday. The pensioners form the only sizeable opposition to the strike, management and pickets say.

W. R. Bone, regional director of the family allowance and old age security division of the national department of health and welfare, said Saturday he has received no instructions for emergency distribution of the pension cheques.

There have been no incidents on the four-to-six-man picket line that strolls around the post office day and night. The management hasn't called on the police for extra security.

"We've got double security," said Dwight Green. "The fellows outside won't let anyone in."

Anyway, valuable mail from banks and financial houses was released after the strike began Thursday.

All that's coming in is about 2,500 pieces of mail daily—mostly tourists' postcards—through a street-side mail chute.

Normal daily average is 120,000 pieces.

There was only one thing that could have made postmaster Allan Davies uneasy. That was the possibility of perishable goods in his few mailbags.

"This time of year we usually get some salmon through the mails," he said.

"But we haven't got any here, or we'd know about it by now."

They ask to swear by affirmation—a procedure allowed in almost all other situations including giving evidence in court.

Judge Drake explained he must turn the couple down because the Citizenship Act specifically requires the oath " . . . so help me God."

law. The whole thing is ridiculous," said the judge.

Mr. Vanderpol explained the reasons for his action.

"As well as matter of principle, my decision was an act of civic duty. As a member of the Canadian nation—which I want to be—it is my duty to do anything in my power to help correct injustice. And I think this law creates injustice."

Ask for Change

The quiet-spoken accountant said he planned to take no further action on the matter of his citizenship application except to ask anyone who believes in his cause to write to their members of Parliament asking for a change in the law.

"An appeal of the judge's decision would be of no use," he said. "Appeals are only useful when something is wrong with the judgment. The judge was absolutely right. I believe it is the law that is wrong."

Came Same Day

Judge Drake's decision came the same day the Ontario Court of Appeals reversed a decision by a citizenship court judge denying citizenship to another Dutch atheist couple, Ernest and Cornelia Bergamas, of Caledonia, Ont.

Mr. Vanderpol draws small comfort from the Ontario decision. The law remains the same, he argues, and the Bergamas will still be obliged to swear the oath.

Last March 30 Citizenship Minister John Nicholson announced in the Commons that the government would pay the legal costs of an appeal by the Bergamas to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Did Not Agree

Mr. Nicholson said the government did not agree with a decision handed down last year against Mr. and Mrs. Bergamas by Ontario County Court Judge W. W. Leach.

The minister said it had not been expected the Citizenship Act would be interpreted in the way that Judge Leach had done. Mr. Nicholson said that if Judge Leach's decision was sustained by the Supreme Court, an amendment to the act would be undertaken by the government.

Can Stay Here

Meanwhile, as a landed immigrant approved by the immigration department as qualified to apply for citizenship, Mr. Vanderpol will continue to reside in Canada in much the same way as he has for the past 5½ years.

Although he cannot vote, cannot run for elective office, cannot take jobs requiring Canadian citizenship, cannot enjoy the ease of travel in the U.S. afforded Canadian citizens and feels his religious freedom has been curtailed, he is undismayed.

"If I had fulfilled the simple task of swearing on the Bible, I would have completely lost my self-respect. It would always be hanging over me that I was not strong enough to resist the temptation I felt—that I had compromised my principles."

Some Benefits

Meanwhile the family enjoys some of the fruits of citizenship.

The children, Margaret, 12, and Lanny, 10, attend public school and Mr. Vanderpol is free to work in peace for his family's support.

And he pays federal, provincial and local taxes—just as if he were a citizen.

Picnic Ready

NANAIMO—Annual inter-playground picnic will be held at Newcastle Island July 28 from 2 p.m. to 5. Children under 7 years must be accompanied by parents.

Teacher Salary Negotiations

Hefty Demand Forecast

B.C. teachers will likely ask a 15-per cent pay increase for 1966. Wilfred J. Peck, president of the B.C. School Teachers Association, forecast in Victoria Saturday.

"We are going to have the highest demands we've ever faced," said Mr. Peck before a meeting of the Vancouver Island branch of the BCSTA.

"We are going to face a multitude of financial demands apart from salaries," the Cowichan Bay president predicted.

Negotiations between individual boards and their teaching staff begin this fall, but both sides will plan strategy and argument in August. Teachers meet in Vernon to formulate requests, and the BCSTA will hold a salary conference in Vancouver Aug. 14 and 15.

SUPPLY PROBLEM

But even with pay demands, said Mr. Peck, "the supply of competent and interested teachers will remain our largest problem."

"If we recognize our schools as diversified—and they are becoming more so—then we must recognize teaching as diversified too," he said.

CRASH COURSES

"Surely we must diversify our methods of qualification."

He recalled that the BCSTA last year approved a resolution calling for a summer school to give crash courses in teaching to qualified non-teachers interested in entering the profession.

The colleges of education and the B.C. Teachers' Federation opposed the idea and nothing was done, he said.

At Saturday's meeting, approximately 25 delegates debated forthcoming government moves to consolidate school districts.

SUBMISSIONS

They passed a resolution to the government, asking that any boundary changes be made by recommendation of a commission which would hear submissions from interested parties.

The meeting shelved a suggestion that school districts sponsor an independent study of the organization and efficiency of the B.C. school system.

Byelection

Platform Spurned By Bevis

Labor stalwart Fred J. Bevis, who Saturday announced his intention to fight the Aug. 12 city council by-election, spurns the idea of having a platform.

"It would be presumptuous of me," he says. "I have to learn the business first and all I can promise is that I will do so."

NO SECTIONALISTS

Mr. Bevis, 68, said if elected, he would have particularly concern for homeowners' problems and possibly industrial matters, "but I don't think persons can be sectionalists in this city."

Number of aspirants for the seat made vacant by the death of Ald. Austin Curtis is now four.

Mr. Bevis, a retired electrical tradesman, is a former president of the shipyard trades council, and ex-member of Victoria Building Trades Council and Victoria Trades Council.

Heat Wave Settles In

Hey, who turned the heat on?

It has been warm all summer, but Saturday, old Mr. Sol really outdid himself. He sent thermometers zooming to 83 degrees, the highest this year.

Tourists and local residents are happy, if a little warm, but Forest Service officials are nervously eyeing the fire hazard charts.

The question now is, how do you beat the heat?

You can go for a ride in one of the horse-drawn Tully-Ho wagons, and see a bit of the town.

Or you can wander down by the Causeway, where cool breezes from the Inner Harbor temper the summer heat.

If you're energetic, why not join the younger set at the beaches or wading pools, depending on your preference?

To the man who wants to beat the heat, without working up a sweat, there is the old-fashioned remedy.

Find yourself a cool, shady spot. Take off as much clothing as you dare.

And the 20-odd men on forest fire suppression teams wait nervously for the first alarms. It will be only a little cooler today, with temperatures reaching 75 degrees.

PERSONAL MENTION

By Dorothy Wrotnowski

It was purely a sentimental journey for Martin Fletcher when he crossed over from Seattle yesterday. And it brought a lot of boyhood memories to the surface, although they have never been very deeply buried.

Martin was one of the well-known English children who came to Canada for the duration. In fact he was one of 15 children whom Mrs. Leonard Crockett brought with her from England in 1948.

Martin was three years old when he arrived and he says he remembers. For years out at Ardmore and falling off a log and nearly drowning at Qualicum are things he can't forget.

I asked him if his boyhood years had anything to do with bringing him to the Americas to live. "Oh, definitely," he said. "Those pine trees, lakes and the whole carefree life kept drawing me back."

Martin is now living in Los Gatos, about 60 miles south of San Francisco. He married an American girl — he wasn't long in producing a picture of her for Marjorie Crockett to see. His wife is an artist and has had showings in Los Gatos. He is with Western Electric, a branch of A. T. & T. and was called to Seattle on business.

At first he didn't realize how close Seattle was to Victoria but when he did he was practically on his way.

"I was wondering if I would recognize the place and was quite prepared to find everything very different than what I remembered. But it is all so familiar — coming into the harbor there was the Empress and the Buildings looking just the same."

"I remember it was just over there, along that esplanade that I said good bye to you," he told Marjorie.

Then they had a laugh about Martin's departure. The war wasn't quite over so there was still pretty strict censorship. The wife Marjorie received had to be deciphered almost as a game.

The children, Marjorie's niece, Cecily Ann Magnus, now Mrs. Peter Goldman, who accompanied Martin back to England, were to be at certain unnamed port and were to be brought back to where the "mountains of Marnie meet the sea."

Martin remembers the arrival at the pier in New York very clearly. There was no one to meet them. The little girl sat on the trunk and cried and Martin says he was pretty vague himself but recalls thinking it was time he had better become a man. So when he saw a woman and six kids approaching he walked up to her and told of his plight. The woman took them into her care then and continued to do so right across the Atlantic in the aircraft carrier.

Then it was public school and an army officer's life for Martin until seven years ago when he crossed the Atlantic this way once more.

He is staying with the Crocketts for the weekend.

Friends from New Jersey

Down at the CPR dock waiting for the boat from Seattle were Cmdr. and Mrs. Ian McPhee and son, David. They were there to meet Mr. and Mrs. John Head, Seattle.

Mrs. John Head, Seattle, who will be their guests for about a week.

The Heads will then go on to Jasper.

Party for Visitors

When Col. and Mrs. B. Nesbitt entertain this week the party will be for The Head.

Not Victoria She Knew

Mrs. Donald H. Grant has been up from Sacramento on a short visit to her cousin, Major and Mrs. Douglas Bullock.

"It's five years since I've been here, and what a change, I don't know whether I like it or not—it most certainly isn't the Victoria I knew and grew up in," Mrs. Grant said. She was the former Vyvyan Bullock, daughter of the late Rev. and Mrs. William Washington Bullock, and a great-granddaughter of Sir James and Lady Douglas.

Pacific Orient Tour

The Garden Camerons have a wonderful trip coming up soon. They are off to the Commonwealth Law Conference in Sydney, Australia next month. That may be the main object of their trip but it will only be one of the places on their agenda.

Crossing over to Vancouver the first week in August the Camerons will go to the Bayshore to meet other members of the legal fraternity who will be taking the Pacific Orient tour.

A day or two later they will set off in a chartered plane that will make a first stop in Hawaii. They'll come down in Fiji and New Zealand before going on to Australia.

In New Zealand the Camerons are looking forward to meeting Mrs. W. B. Clayton who formerly lived in Duncan. Mrs. Clayton has been working with the Maori Police Cooperation in rehabilitating the Maori groups left stranded when the government took over ancestral lands.

Returning from the conference the Camerons will go to Hong Kong and will spend a week in Japan before coming home.

For the six weeks while they are away their home will be occupied by Mr. H. F. McCabe who will be remembered here as assistant manager of the Bank of Montreal a few years back. At the time of his retirement Mr. McCabe was manager of the bank in St. Catharines, Ont. He is now living in Vancouver.

The Camerons' daughter, Shirley and her husband, Donald Wiggins who lived in Seattle for many years have now moved to Southern California.

Likes the West

Miss Dorothy Smith who teaches a class of children from five to seven years when she is at home in Solihull, Warwickshire, England, is here on holiday. It's not her first visit to Canada; she was in Skatatoon about five years ago but it is her first time here and she likes this much better.

Miss Smith thinks our weather is lovely, especially so since they have been having rotten weather at home — wet and cold. Just as well she's here this year and not last. Miss Smith is staying with her nephew and niece, the John Weavers.

Arriving Today

Mrs. Jay Durand is expecting her niece, Miss Mary Eleanor Bradbury to arrive from Los Angeles today. The visitor, an executive of the I. Magnin store in LA, who has been in Victoria on several vacations will be here two or three weeks this trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred E. Loft, 2111 Aldenby Street, announce the forthcoming marriage of their elder daughter, Patricia Dell, to Mr. John David Ross Kendrew, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Kendrew of Sooke. The wedding will take place at St. Matthias Church at 7:30 p.m., August 21, with Rev. R. O. Wilkes officiating. (Mr. Kendrew's photo by Simpson Studio)

Bride Designs Gown

An exquisite floor-length gown of white crystal organza over tulle was worn by Donna Marie Fiddick for her marriage which was made by the bride. Matching lace edged the bride's veil which fell to her waist from a cut-crystal headpiece designed by her mother. Sweet heart roses centred her bouquet of white gladiolus and ivy.

This crepe dress in either jade green or mulberry by Miss Deb Frocks of Montreal has ruffled ecru colored crocheted lace ruffles on neckline and sleeves. It is called the Granny Mod look.

Rev. C. R. McGilvray officiated at the ceremony in St. Alden's United Church for the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Fiddick, 2746 Sheburne Street, and the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Haire, 1710 Ryan Street.

Mr. Fiddick gave his daughter in marriage.

Master of honor Mrs. Larry Sober of Vancouver, bridesmaid Mrs. Herb Dawson and bridesmaid Miss Jacquelyn Fiddick were gowned alike in pink crystal organza over ecru tulle A-line dresses. They wore rosebud headpieces on tulle and carried pink carnations and ivy.

Flower girls, the Misses Janet Bodner and Adele De Giralomo, wore white flowered nylon sheer frocks styled with bouffant skirts and pink cummerbunds. They carried baskets of pink carnations.

Mr. Terry Ward was best man. Ushers were Mr. Bill Weiden, Mr. Omer Haire and Mr. Reg Carter. Master Douglas Carter was ring bearer.

Red roses decorated the bride's table at the reception which followed in Holywood House. Proposing the toast to the bride was Mr. Bill Smith.

On their return from a honeymoon in California, the newlyweds will make their home at 426 Tipton Avenue.

For travelling the bride chose a turquoise A-line dress with lace top. She wore a top coat on tulle and white accessories.

Lace Handkerchief
'Something Borrowed'

An heirloom gold bracelet, set with rubies and pearls, was "something old" worn by Miss Hilary Judith Stirling Ford, for her marriage Saturday afternoon to Ellery John Littleton.

The bracelet belongs to her maternal grandmother and was worn by the bride for the ceremony in St. Mary's Anglican Church, Oak Bay, Canon Hywel J. Jones officiated.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Hallin Ford, 1318 Hampshire Road, was a picture as she entered the church on the arm of her father. Her floor-length gown of ivory peau de sole was topped with a lace jacket and featured a full-length detachable train. A chapel-length scalloped veil misted from a garland of white velvet and satin lilies. She wore a pearl droplet on a gold chain, gift of the groom, and carried a lace handkerchief as "something borrowed" from her mother. Ivory rosebuds, white gardenias and stephanotis were in the bridal bouquet.

The groom is the son of Mrs. W. Littleton, 2143 Granville Street, and E. M. Littleton, Alberni.

White and shell pink gladiolus decorated the altar and chancel. Ivory satin bows marked the guest pews.

Surf-aqua toned afternoon-length dresses in crystal charm, topped with little jackets covered with green diamonds nylon, were worn by attendants, the Misses Sally Ford, maid of honor; Jane Hansen and Natsya Littleton, bridesmaids.

They had headresses of circular blue and green diamond rosebuds and carried bouquets of white gladiolus and blue cornflowers.

Best man was Larry Devlin and ushers were Alfred Patterson and John Kendrew.

A tiny loving cup of white rosebuds topped the wedding cake at a reception held in the Oak Bay Beach Hotel. The lounge was decorated with arrangements of white gladiolus and blue hydrangeas. Arnold Edmonds proposed the toast to the bride.

Susan Jagers of Duncan carries out her stable manager duties while Maureen Moore makes friends with Quicksilver, the horse she has been riding in the rally. Maureen, aged 16, is from Rothesay, N.B., and competed in the National Pony Club rally last year when it was held at Rothesay.

Rally First Time in West

Today is the last of the three-day National Pony Club Rally being held at Duncan Exhibition grounds and Lieutenant-Governor and Mrs. Pearkes will be there to see the final events. His Honor will also present awards and prizes to the winners.

Judges for the three-day rally are Miss Inez Fischer-Credo of Vancouver, who represented Canada at the Olympic Games at Tokyo in 1964 with her dressage mare, Gordina, when they placed 18th in the world competition.

The other judge, Mrs. Dorothy Watney, is no stranger to the Cowichan district, having lived there many years. Now she lives at Abbotsford and owns the Anglo-Arab Arion, winner of many prizes and champion hack of B.C.

Mrs. Watney was one of those responsible for starting the Cowichan Riding Club in 1929 and the Cowichan Pony Club in 1951.

Photographs on this page were taken on Thursday when the pre-rally work was done. This is an important day and the general behavior of members doing this work counts in the final judging.

Each member is assigned a stall as a tack room. How he or she sets up this room, grooms and feeds their horses, general tidiness and cleanliness, add up as well as the actual riding.

This is the first time a pony club rally has been held west of Calgary.

Penny Fowler, pictured up on Whipper Snapper, the horse her sister, Joanne, rode in rally events. W. A. (Billy) King, president of the Cowichan District Riding Club, gives her a few pointers. The Fowler family—Mr. and Mrs. Harold S. Joanne, Penny and Christopher—came from Kirkland, Wash., for the rally and had a camping holiday at the T. Lyons' place at Genoa Bay.

Ron Chasmer was one of the group who came from the east for the rally. He was really serious about getting used to his borrowed mount, Miramichi, before the events started. His home is in Toronto.

Split and polish was the order of the day as young pony club members prepared for opening rally events. Here, George Rushworth of Duncan helps Joan Boyles of Duncan, an associate member of the Cowichan Club, while Doug Chandler of Sidney does a last-minute, shine-up job.

Members of pony clubs from across Canada, in Duncan for the three-day rally, put in some real work hours on Thursday morning getting things in shape. As the noon hour approached they cast hungry-looking faces toward the building where lunch was to be served, and they didn't lose any time when the cry, Lunch Time, was heard. Later, the group was taken on a cruise in the R CN Oriole.

Head for a dream holiday in beautiful Hawaii . . .

More and more budget-conscious travellers are discovering the advantages of "package" tours and holidays . . . which, as you likely know, are not the same as group tours . . . We dropped in to Paul's the other day and had scarcely mentioned the name Honolulu when they told us all about a new package called "Waikiki Beach Holiday" . . . eight full days at lovely Waikiki for only $79 . . . which includes 7 nights at the Reef Towers or New Coral Seas Hotel (both excellent) . . . plus tours around Oahu . . . Honolulu . . . Pearl Harbor . . . A variety of entertainment . . . airport reception complete with leis . . . arrival and departure transfers . . . and a long list of other delights, even including complimentary cocktails at 7 different restaurants! . . . If you want to extend your stay you can keep your hotel room at much reduced rates . . . or take a fascinating 4-day tour of three neighbor islands for only $99.50 . . . You arrive in Honolulu any day you please, and your holiday is then planned to suit your schedule . . . Now here's a travel bargain pretty hard to beat . . . you couldn't hope to do as much on your own for the money . . . and what's more, you'd probably miss an awful lot . . . If you're tempted, we advise you to see Paul's soon . . . you need to book well ahead for this Waikiki Holiday . . . George Foster Travel Service, 1066 Government St., EV 3-6102.

New York decorators are advising their clients to forget bathroom tile and have vinyl wallpaper instead . . . palatial china fixtures, needle point bath mats.

Comparisons are not odious here . . .

Seems like one of the popular forms of entertainment around Victoria these days is going to view new apartment developments . . . whether you're thinking of moving or not! . . . Yes, we do it too . . . and the more we see of others, the more we appreciate Christie Point which, for going on two years, we've called "home sweet home" . . . Maybe you'll say this is prejudice, but we don't think so . . . Christie Point is unrivalled as a natural setting . . . 15 acres of wooded and landscaped grounds forming a peninsula in Portage Inlet . . . with the atmosphere and amenities of a holiday resort . . . yet less than 10 minutes from the heart of downtown! . . . Want a heated swimming pool? We've got it . . . Boat dockette . . . Rooms to really live and relax away from it all! . . . The apartments and town houses are extremely nice and roomy . . . They all have scenic views . . . most have gardens which you can tend or not, as you please . . . there are play areas for the children . . . separate blocks for families and adults . . . Another big "plus" is the friendly spirit that prevails around Christie Point . . . Clare and Irene Brynjolsson, the resident managers, are genuinely interested in seeing that their tenants are kept happy as well as comfortable (no heavy-handed whip-cracking like you find in some apartments!) Christie Point Apartments, 2801 Craigsway Road, 385-0441.

The engagement is announced of Barbara Ann McDonald, daughter of Mrs. E. W. Allen, Sarnia, Ont., to Mr. Wayne Robert Rowley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rowley, 3172 Wascana Street. The wedding will take place at 12 noon, August 21, in Our Lady of Mercy Church, Sarnia. The groom-elect received his B.Sc. degree in 1963 from University of British Columbia. — (Miss Allen's photo by Askar Shal)

Skirts In, Pants Out In Italian Fashions

By SHEILA WALSH

ROME (UPI) — Skirts seemed to be in, and pants out as the Italian fall-winter high fashion collection wound up here.

There were some pants in the collections Italian designers previewed for international buyers and press in Rome and Florence but the enthusiasm for them seemed to be sinking fast.

The majority of Italian fashion houses even went skirts for evening.

There was no move to abolish the "palazzo pajama" but there seemed to be a realization that the world's supply of palazzo in which they could be worn was limited.

Resplendent and flowing evening pants outfits appeared in a number of Italian collections. Skirts did too. And designer Alberto Fabiani might have been sounding some kind of warning when he presented an evening pants outfit that was the antithesis of the silken, floppy legged "palazzo pajama."

Fabiani's evening pants outfit consisted of Beate-style piped-trim grey flannel trousers and a brightly tailored tunic of broadtail.

The Fontana Sisters, a high fashion house that has always favored skirts, headed the list of the final day of showings in Rome.

So far, the Italian look for fall and winter has meant hemlines somewhere in the neighborhood of the knee. There was also plenty of room for choice of the silhouette.

The Italian fashion spectrum runs from the brief and basic space-age dress to the classic ball gown with lots of emphasis on the figure.

Newlyweds to Make Home in Calgary

Calgary will be the home of newlyweds, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Francis Johnston who were married Saturday evening in St. Patrick's Church by Father F. Leonard.

The bride, former Evelyn Marie Dupuis, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Dupuis, 1686 Derby Road, and the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George Johnston, 357 Hillside Avenue.

Given in marriage by her father the bride chose a floor-length gown in train of white tulle with a full skirt and a pearl crown held her waist length veil. She carried a cascade of coral gladiolus.

Mrs. L. Barlow as matron of honor for her sister and bridesmaids, the Misses Audrey McLaughlin and Elaine Dupuis, bride's sister, were in emerald green shot with French blue crystal peau gowns. They wore white accessories and a crystal necklace. Coral and white gladiolus formed their cascade bouquets.

Mr. Wally Kerneted of Calgary was best man. Mr. Gerry Peddle and Mr. Leonard Dupuis were ushers.

A reception followed at the home of the bride's parents. For her going-away ensemble the bride chose a beige linen suit and coral accessories.

Spend Honeymoon In San Francisco

Marquette Rose Webb became the bride of Mr. Larry Webb, bride's brother. Dancing followed the reception which was held at Holyrood House.

Monsieur M. T. O'Connell heard the marriage vows for the daughter of Mrs. Marquette Rose Webb, 2090 Shakespeare Street, and the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Nicholas, Cranston, B.C.

Given in marriage by her brother, Mr. Alfred Robert Webb, the bride chose a floor-length gown of white tulle featuring a row of re-embroidered lace appliques encircling the midriff. Soft unpressed pleats fell from the fitted waistline and a bustle added back interest. Veil of illusion net mistled from a floral rose and pink Rapunzel roses were in her bridal bouquet.

Miss Jill Marsh, maid of honor, and the Misses Terry Steiner and Michaela Prior wore light blue dresses of sheer nylon over tulle with lace overplackets. They carried pale pink gladiolus.

Mr. David Flagg was best man. Ushering were Mr. Tom Brimhead and Mr. Emile Webb, bride's brother.

Dancing followed the reception which was held at Holyrood House.

For a honeymoon trip to San Francisco the bride donned a pink two-piece suit, pink hat and white accessories.

On their return the newlyweds will make their home at the Executive House.

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: Our firm occupies an entire floor in one of the city's larger office buildings. The architect who planned this building must have hated females. The ladies' room is about half a block from our suite of offices, which employs 30 women. The men's room is directly across the hall.

I heard that a certain woman in the accounting department was seen going out of the men's room yesterday morning. I did not believe it so I asked her. She said "You bet it's true. I wouldn't think of hiding all the way down to the ladies' room."

Any suggestions — SHOCKED DISBELIEVER.

Dear Shocked: Left alone, certain problems solve themselves. If that dame obstinates to use the men's room something is bound to happen to change her mind. Suddenly she'll decide it's worth the hike.

Dear Ann Landers: After ten years of marriage and two children my wife and I were divorced. Several months ago I met a wonderful woman — also divorced. We are very much in love and plan to marry in the fall. The problem is this:

How much should I reveal to my fiancée of why my marriage failed? I'm not afraid to give her the complete story, including the part where I was clearly to blame. But do you feel this is wise?

My fiancée speaks very little of her unfortunate marriage which suits me just fine. I don't want to know any more. Can it be that she doesn't want to know any more either? As a woman you will be able to tell me what is best — ADVANCE: THANKS

Dear Advance: As a woman I can tell you nothing is as unpredictable as a woman. My advice is to ask her.

Some women believe ignorance is bliss, and what they don't know can't hurt them — to pile on another cliché. If your fiancée is one of these types, keep quiet unless, of course, you have a full record, an illegitimate child or an incurable illness. (Such information should never be withheld from the one you plan to marry.)

If your fiancée wishes to hear the full story of your marriage bust-up, I urge you to be charitable toward your ex-wife. Remember, every time you throw a little mud you lose a little ground.

Dear Ann Landers: Our two-and-a-half-year-old son is a good boy but he doesn't know how to play with pets. He gets very rough and I'm always scared to death he'll hurt a small animal.

Some close friends have a toy poodle. They take Bootie everywhere, and I must say she is very well trained. She has never done anything un ladylike in our honor, or in anyone else's that I know of.

These friends always bring Bootie when they come to visit. By the time they leave I'm a nervous wreck. Our son tries to play with Bootie but he doesn't know how. He pushed her over and knocked her around several times, which has produced some dirty looks.

Bootie now sits on her master's lap, shivering the whole time they are in our house. Last Sunday all I heard was, "Don't touch her. Go away. You're a naughty boy."

Do we have the right to ask these people to leave their dog at home? — CANT DECIDE.

Dear Can't: Of course you do, but a better solution would be to invest at least as much time training your son as your friends have spent training their dog.

A two-and-a-half-year-old child should know what No means. Moreover, children should be taught early to treat animals gently. So get busy.

Homework on the Lateshow Possible with School TV

By DENNIS ORCHARD
NORTH KAMLOOPS, B.C. (CP) — With the aid of a television set, a teacher watching television at home will turn on equipment 2 1/2 miles away at school to record the program for next-day viewing by his students.

A basketball coach will televise a player jumping for the basket, then run the tape through a monitor to show the boy his mistakes.

These are two of the refinements planned for the next school year in the closed-circuit television at North Kamloops Secondary School. The program was launched last fall.

It will cost an extra $13,000 to add this videotape equipment to NORKAM-TV's studios, bringing the bill for less than two cameras, controls and 11 monitors to around $18,000.

EXPANSION

The expanded facilities will also give the project a sense of permanence and perhaps make the results easier to measure. As of now, originator Larry Shorter and other members of the staff can only offer their opinion, and their opinion is that TV has broadened the learning experience and probably improved it.

In the last school year 10 courses of English, social studies, mathematics, science and French were delivered by 17 teachers to students in Grades 8 and 10.

WILL SHOOT FILMS

The system, in use five hours a day five days a week, met a difficult situation caused by a deficit of a plebeian for expansion of the crowded 1,000-student school.

Next fall the system will have a chance to branch out. Videotape will allow teachers and their camera crews—all students—to store and repeat programs. They will be able to go into the community to film work at the refinery and the fire hall, the city library and the mayor's office.

Mr. Shorter can preserve the best of Canadian television with the switching he is installing in his home. All forms of sports activity can be taped for replay, with stop-motion and slow-motion tricks in the package.

STORES ROOM STUDIO

The existing studio of NORKAM-TV is a made-over, 12-foot-square store room. Students operate controls and cameras while a teacher gives his lesson from a desk or blackboard.

The telecast is usually fed into five monitors in an adjoining study room containing 120 students. Teachers have found it best to cut their lessons to 25 minutes or less.

Instructional TV has meant a form of team teaching, allowing such natural pairs as John Hunter and Gordon Lloyd to exploit the former's flare for cartoons and visual dramatization and the latter's knack for specialization and organization. Both teach social studies.

HELPS SLOW LEARNERS

Mr. Shorter, 34-year-old English and mathematics teacher, is a former radio, television and advertising man. He began

In September, 1962, to prepare an elaborate report on U.S. experience with educational TV, and is writing now about the results here.

He has discovered that television attacks one big block to learning by below-average pupils: Their difficulty in visualizing what they are being taught.

By putting good pictures on camera, some subjects come alive for these students and their recall in later discussion is exceptional, he says.

After the killer whale Moby Doll died in captivity at Vancouver last year, Dr. Pat Mo-

Geer of the University of B.C. brought the mammal's brain here for minute examination before the camera.

A total of 500 students in locations through the school watched. In a normal laboratory class, only a fraction of that number could have crowded close enough for a meaningful demonstration.

NORKAM-TV has helped discipline, too. The programs seem to command attention, and any disturbance can be corrected by zooming in on the stern face of the instructor.

"It's like having five teachers in the room," says Mr. Shorter.

'Schools of Second Chance'

Junior Colleges Stepping Stones To Universities

By DAN POWERS

CALGARY (CP) — The president of one of Canada's oldest junior colleges says the "schools of second chance" are in step with the times.

Dr. W. J. Collett, head of Mount Royal College—a small United Church—sponsored college located in the western part of downtown Calgary—says the primary purpose of a junior college is education between high school and university.

Similar to junior colleges starting to spring up in Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia, Mount Royal serves a variety of purposes, Dr. Collett says.

STEPPING STONE

It can be a stepping stone to university or a chance at an education better than high school but not of the complete university level.

It can produce a skilled stenographer, clerical librarian, a journalist with two years' training, recreation worker, radio and television announcer, interior designer or community service worker.

It can resurrect the high school dropout; re-equip the businessman; prepare a student for transfer to a university engineering course, and make room for the late-blooming student.

FEW GO TO UNIVERSITY

In short, while breaking its program down under such broad headings as arts and sciences, high school, business development and adult education, the junior college can fill what is recognized as a large gap in Canadian education.

"Only 10 per cent of Alberta's high school students go on to university," Dr. Collett said in an interview. "Maybe four per cent of them graduate from university."

"What about the other 90 per cent?"

"Maybe technical institutes and nursing take 25 per cent of that 90 per cent. But what of those others who must go out on the labor market with only a high school diploma?

"With automation, the high school diploma is no longer a passport to employment."

Mount Royal, founded in 1910 by Methodist minister Rev. Dr. George W. Kerby, began as an elementary school for children of Alberta ranchers, later dropped its lower grades and concentrated on high school courses.

In the 1930s there were students who couldn't attend the University of Alberta at Edmonton because of financial problems and the university suggested that Mount Royal teach arts courses that could later be accepted at the U. of A.

ENROLLMENT CLIMBS

That affiliation still continues and some Mount Royal programs allow a student to move into second-year university. Its two-year engineering school has a transfer agreement with the University of Oklahoma, a post-war development.

Dr. Collett holds a master's degree in psychology from Columbia University in New York and a doctor of divinity degree from St. Stephen's College at the U. of A. in Edmonton.

Mount Royal is 85-per-cent financed by tuition and fees, he says. There is help from public subscriptions and funds raised by the United Church.

ENROLLMENT GROWS

But of this year's enrolment of 1,300, only 130 students transferring to university were eligible for provincial or federal government help. The school expects to have an enrolment of 3,500 within five years.

The college, which also has a conservatory of music and a speech and hearing centre, has four main buildings including residences, gymnasium, administration and classrooms.

Surrounded by older homes and offices near the Mewata Football Stadium, it must find a new location to expand.

Saskatchewan Hay Said Best Ever

Saskatchewan

Saskatchewan's hay crop is described by the provincial wheat pool authority as "wonderful."

A report from 600 agents of the pool says cultivated hay crop conditions range from "good" to "excellent."

It is expected to be as much as 45 per cent above average.

There have been only 72 fires reported in the woods of northern Saskatchewan this year compared with a total of 387 up to the same time last year, according to T. A. Harper, chief of the provincial resources program.

The hazard area throughout the province in mid-July was classified as from low to medium.

Ernest F. Gardner retained the Moosehide constituency for the Liberal government with a 212-vote majority in a provincial by-election.

Q. S. Sundstrom, returning officer, released returns showing Mr. Gardner received 3,653 votes, W. F. Goodwin, CCF candidate had 2,821 and A. E. Bruce, Conservative, polled 2,407.

A bridge is to be built across the North Saskatchewan River in the vicinity of the Deer Creek ferry crossing about 20 miles northeast of Lloydminster, Highways Minister Gordon Grant has announced.

Mr. Grant said the bridge will serve a large area now dependent on ferries and will provide a link between the Lloydminster area and the Paradise Hill, St. Walburg and Meadow Lake districts.

The Duval Corporation of Houston, Tex., will spend $61,000,000 on a conventional shaft mine potash operation seven miles west of Saskatoon, Premier Ross Thatcher has announced.

Manitoba

Despite a sharp drop in durum wheat planting, the Prairie's crop trend continues upward, compared to the last 10 years' average.

A Winnipeg report says an estimated 27,750,000 acres of wheat is in crop. This compares with the 29,000,000-acre crop of last year, the highest on record, but is well above the 24,000,000-acre average since 1945.

A hailstorm destroyed four sections of crop on July 16 at Shoal Lake and moving south-east out a swath at Belmont and, across the Pembina River, sliced into American farmlands. The crops were a total loss.

Winnipeg's Red River floodway probably will be used for rowing and paddling competitions during the 1967 Pan American Games.

The south end of the floodway is considered ideal for the purpose. Plans call for an 8,000-foot course with a depth of 10 feet.

A 16-month-old boy was killed in Winkler when his father, Evans Priesen, backed down the driveway to the street.

The baby was playing on the drive.

Alberta

The city of Calgary has given approval to construction of a $1,000,000 plywood manufacturing plant employing 100 persons.

Backer of the new plant is understood to be Cypress Mines Corp. of Eugene, Ore.

Alberta is beginning to feel the pinch of the Vancouver grain handlers' strike, although the situation is not yet critical.

Grain merchants report that although southern Alberta areas are becoming hard-pressed for storage, northern points are still accepting grain as it is delivered.

The show-up came when the railways restricted grain movement as loaded grain cars clogged Vancouver facilities.

The Alberta electoral boundaries commission has received 45 notices of representation for its public hearings which open in Edmonton Aug. 3, Dr. Ivan Head, commission secretary, says.

The commission, which has made recommendations for re-

Euratom Eyes Canada As Uranium Supplier

By RUSSELL ELMAN

BRUSSELS (CP) — The European Atomic Energy Community (Euratom) in a new report singles out Canada as potentially the best long-term source of natural uranium for the Common Market's growing nuclear energy requirements.

Euratom, set up in 1957 to co-ordinate and develop nuclear research and industry for peaceful purposes in France, West Germany, Italy, The Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg, estimates the six countries will need some 275,000 tons of natural uranium between now and the year 2000. By that date it forecasts a $80,000,000,000 (U.S.) investment in nuclear power plants to generate two-thirds of the Community's electricity.

RESEARCH

Since the six countries possess only meagre uranium resources, Euratom's executive commission and supply agency have begun scouting around for other sources of supply. A number of studies have been launched and contacts made with "third countries," notably Canada, South Africa and the United States.

"From these contracts," says Euratom's eighth general report, "it appears that Canada has most to offer the Community in way of long-term supply, by reason of the important resources already brought to light in this country and of the possibilities it offers for prospecting."

MAY INVEST

Euratom shares the view of the French government that it is in their best interests, if possible, to own or have a degree of control in the mines producing uranium, and in an earlier report it suggested that Europe could take advantage of the present slump in the uranium market by acquiring interests in mines dormant in Canada. Also it is examining the possibility of prospecting in Argentina and in African countries associated with the Common Market.

Although Euratom's report does not comment specifically on the bilateral negotiations between Canada and France for a long-term uranium contract, IT NOTES THAT France is conducting "a systematic and continuous effort" to exploit her own national resources and to acquire her own supplies from Canada, the African continent and Madagascar.

RESEARCH

On the research side, Euratom says that co-operation with Canada, particularly in the heavy water moderated reactor research program at Ispra in Italy, has speeded progress. This type of reactor, using natural uranium, is considered to hold considerable promise both technically and economically for Europe.

The report also notes with interest Canada's work on the CANDU (Canadian Deuterium Uranium) project and the NPD2 (Nuclear Power Development) reactor.

AGREEMENT

Canada has a 10-year general agreement with Euratom, which embraced a five-year technical agreement between Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. and Euratom that expired last October. Co-operation has continued, though, and conversations for renewal of the technical accord are in progress.

Officials here anticipate the agreement will be renewed for a further five years, once several technical questions have been settled. The Canadian role in irradiation research is expected to be stepped up.

Steve: It could be good for your character, if my story led the police to you... and you went on trial! ... But Kelly's starting to bite her pretty nails... take her out to eat and I'll finish the fill-in when you come back... my numbers not likely to come up in the next two hours! ... And at this moment... the greenhouse light was right on his face, stinger... he could read his lips real good... he's telling Roger everything! ... I'll be right out, Gus... meet me at the front gate!

Rooper: Jughead? ... I'm giving up karate! ... you can have my white pants with the yellow belt... ... And the unbroken building tiles! ... What about the lessons? ... I have a paperback! ... Arch! you never told me that! ... Have you seen a doctor?

Drake: Brusquely, I'm starting orders at a dinner in a dinner costume... ... While I get out of these clothes, you get the person left over! ... tick-tock... may not arrive in time to help us! ... See how I shared your last piece of cake... that at a fight camp table tennis is everything!

Morgan: Suspecting that Keith Cavell had beaten up the man he saw in emergency room, Morgan angrily confronts him... ... Not that your reason makes a difference now, but why did you do it to me? ... If it makes no difference, why should I tell you? ... There was a time when I'd enjoy seeing you come to town, Keith... but not any more! ... You seem to get a sadistic pleasure out of hurting people... it was cruel of you to tell Jessica that you had to see her... then leave her at the airport waiting... abandoned!

Lil: When your obedience professor says "sit up and beg," Douglas Barfranks Junior... ... He means "sit up and beg!" ... Turn in your collar and leash! You are expelled from Lasse University for conduct unbecoming a dog! ... I have the unclean feeling we haven't seen the last of him!

Abner: As Judge Parker drives out to the country club, he sees two boys trying to hitchhike a ride... recognizing one of them, he stops his car! ... Aren't you Glenn Morris? ... Yes, sir! ... Where are you headed, boys? ... To the country club... to capsize! ... Were you in my son Randy's class at school, Glenn? ... No, Judge! ... Randy was a year ahead of me!

Judge: This looks like a good spot, Jack... let's drop anchor... ... All right, professor, you're the expert on this area... ... Being off—ah—ample birth I'd better try the research submarine by myself for the first exploration... ... Good luck, bring me back a starfish... ... Don't forget to write!

Garden Notes

Wanted: Insects

By M. V. CHENUT

PEACOCK ORCHID (E. Y. Esquimaux) I understand the "Peacock Orchid" bulbs you mention were given away last spring by a mail order firm in Eastern Canada as a free premium with an order for regular bulbs. This plant is not a true orchid, nor has the Peacock Orchid name any validity. Actually, the plant is Aldanthera muriei, a wild gladiolus originally from Ethiopia with creamy white flowers and chocolate brown stripes on the petals. The bulbs are quite a bit smaller than those of the ordinary gladiolus and sell for around $2 per dozen. While not particularly striking in appearance, these flowers are valued for their pleasing fragrance. Culture is the same as for gladiolus.

JERUSALEM CHERRY (F. C. Victoria) The reason why your Jerusalem Cherry plant, grown from a slip, is dropping its blossoms and failing to develop any berries is because there are no insects in the house to pollinate the blossoms. This often happens with the ornamental pepper houseplant and the dwarf houseplant lemon tree too—the blossoms fail to set fruit for lack of pollination.

Lacking insects to do the job, it is necessary to hand-pollinate the blossoms. Make up a little swab of cotton batting on the end of a toothpick and twirl this gently in the centre of each open blossom in turn. This will transfer pollen from one flower to another, and the little fruits should start to form within a few days after treatment. Repeat as each new batch of blossoms opens on the plant.

MIXED VINE CROPS (H. G. McMillan) The fact that you are growing marrow, squash and pumpkin vines close together couldn't possibly affect this year's crop, no matter what your neighbours tell you. It is true that cross-pollination takes place between the blossoms of these closely-related plants, but this has absolutely no effect upon the size, shape, color or flavor of this year's marrows, squashes or pumpkins. The effect of cross-pollination would only show up if seeds were saved and planted next year—they would probably produce a very inferior vegetable, neither true squash nor true pumpkin, but something in between.

It is something like what happens when a blue-eyed girl marries a brown-eyed man. Living together cannot possibly affect the color of their eyes; the mixing of the genes shows up only in the next and succeeding generations.

MISTLETOE LEAVES (R. H. W. Cordova Bay) The red blisters and the curling of the leaves on your black currant bushes are not due to the least cur disease that attacks peach trees. On black currants, this effect is produced by aphids feeding upon the undersurface of the leaf.

It is quite safe to use a poison insecticide now that the fruit has been gathered. Ordinary insect sprays are not much good here, as they fail to penetrate inside the curl of the leaf where the aphids are hiding. It would be better to use a systemic insecticide—one which enters into the sap, rendering all parts of the plant poisonous to all insects that feed upon it. Some good systemics are Rogor, Cygon and Gardol.

ART BUCHWALD Fights Losing Battle

Computers Gang Up

A few weeks ago I wrote about a man who brought down the curse of the entire computer world on himself by defying a warning not to "fold, bend or mutilate" a computerized bill.

Much to my surprise many computers, when fed the article, strongly objected to it, as they felt it was aimed against them.

I received in the mail from National Association For the Advancement of Computer Programming a marked card which said:

OBJECT TO SLANDEROUS ARTICLE CONCERNING COMPUTERS

UNLESS RETRACTION FORTHCOMING WE WILL HAVE ALL NEWSPAPERS WHICH USE COMPUTERS TO SET TYPE ON YOUR COLUMN PRINT IT UPHIDE DOWN STOP DO NOT STAPLE OR PUT SCOTCH TAPE ON THIS CARD.

A question of freedom of the press is involved here. Can computers dictate to newspapermen what they can or cannot write?

We think not.

I would like to point out that I am not against all computers. There are some who do good work, such as those used in the space program and the war on poverty.

My objection is with computers who have overstepped their role in modern society and refuse to recognize the human element which is so basic to our way of life.

It has been known for a long time that many computers make mistakes, but if they admit it they will be replaced by other computers. Therefore, rather than acknowledge they are wrong, they will make the same mistake over and over again.

Recently a well known record club sent me a bill that I had already paid. I wrote the club pointing this out. But the computer for the club refused to admit it had erred and sent another bill.

Fortunately I had a cancelled cheque to prove I had paid, and I sent this along as proof that the computer was wrong.

Instead of admitting its error like a man the computer sent another bill with a warning that if I didn't pay it this time, it would be turned over to a collection agency computer who wouldn't be as friendly about the payment as the record company computer.

In desperation I called the president of the record company, who said it was out of his hands. For one thing, the computer was 2,000 miles away and for another if he took a stand in my case, the computer might become angry and thousands of innocent club members could suffer.

"Why don't you pay the bill?" he asked.

Your computer is sick," I shouted. "I'll get even with both of you if it's the last thing I do."

And I did. The next time the bill came I took a tiny pair of cuticle scissors and cut one extra perforation in the bill. I never heard from them again.

It is this day the record company computer sent me a bill that I had already paid. I wrote the club pointing this out. But the computer for the club refused to admit it had erred and sent another bill.

Misprints Plague

SYDNEY HARRIS

A newspaper colleague and I were discussing misprints the other day, and we agreed that typsetters (like other people) see the words they expect to see, and not what is actually written on the paper.

Over the years, I have judiciously learned to avoid using certain words in print, in the sad knowledge that they are most likely to be misprinted—for one of the strongest habits in the need to convert the strange into the familiar.

The word "casual," for instance, almost always comes out as "casual" in a first proof. "Casual" is used mostly by scientists or philosophers, and the layman's eye automatically transposes the "u" and the "s" into the more familiar "casual."

Another troublesome word is "eclectic," which has no exact synonym, and means "choosing from various sources and systems," as opposed to rigid or dogmatic. It is a useful word, but usually it makes its appearance in print as "eclectic," which is dimming to the writer and puzzling to the reader.

Of course, some misprints are due merely to carelessness or haste, such as the all-too-frequent description of martial troubles as "martial," which may be a fine example of a Freudian slip.

One doesn't dare to "exercise" spirits, for fear they will turn out to be doing gymnastics. And book critics have learned never to describe a novel as being in the "picaresque" tradition (which means having a rogue as a hero), for it will inevitably turn up as "picturesque."

Recently, in a review of Mortimer Alder's new book, The Conditions of Philosophy, I referred to his attitude as "ironical," which is the opposite of "poetical" and means trying to reconcile opposites. Naturally, it came out as "ironical," for the typesetter thought I had simply misspelled the word in my copy.

Sometimes we refuse to see a word as it was meant to be—like the writer (was it Dickens?) who passed a factory with a big sign: "ROMANCEMENT." This intrigued him so much that he returned, and finally figured out that it was advertising "ROMAN CEMENT."

I do the same with "molester," which my unconscious mind divides into two syllables instead of three, and I imagine a molester as a small animal, somewhat like a hamster. Likewise, when I read the word "malefactor," I divide it into two words: "male factor." I shudder to think what Freud would make of that.

A friend of mine, with a quite different turn of mind, never sees the word "physiotherapy" without dividing it into three words, to make "Physio the rapist." He's the kind of man who would keep a pet molester in his basement.

Lesson for North American Wives!

Women Outwork Buffaloes

By HAL BOYLE

DA NANG, Viet Nam (AP)—An open letter home—Dear friend wife: Believe me, baby, when I get back home you're going to be the one who carries out the garbage. It's an old South Vietnamese custom that a lot of North American men over here are beginning to think makes sense.

I know that there is nothing makes a North American woman madder than to tell her she has an easy life—that she is overprivileged and underworked. But I tell you, round-eyes, your eyes would get even rounder if you saw how South Vietnamese women live—and apparently like it.

Men have only two chief labor-saving devices in South Viet Nam—women and water buffaloes. You can tell the women from the buffaloes because the women work harder.

In the rice paddy country the men and the buffaloes feel they've done their bit when they've finished plowing. But women toil in the fields, tend the children, do the cooking and the laundering, and take care of the chickens, ducks and pigs. The ideal wife is one who produces a good rice crop and a baby every year.

Most of the country's products seem to be transported on women's backs. They use bamboo shoulder poles from which heavily loaded baskets are suspended fore and aft. To balance the baskets, the women walk with a peculiar rhythmic shuffle.

The South Vietnamese toiler earns her dough the hard way in the city, too. About 20 percent of the labor force is female.

Women work as ditch diggers, dock walkovers, hod carriers, plasterers and as laborers on heavy construction projects. They get a daily wage of from 60 to 85 piastres—about 85 cents to $1.20—depending on their skills.

The average woman gets almost twice as much done as a man in a day," said an American construction engineer. "Of course, I don't know whether she lasts as long."

Most of the women outdoor workers are under 30 and wear peasant outfits—black trousers and conical hats. Some of them are pretty.

When I get home, get ready to set another rice bowl on the table. By the way, I'm bringing along a bamboo shoulder pole—to make your trips to the supermarket a little easier.

Organist

Recital Was Coolest

By IAN ARROL

The coolest entertainment Saturday in Victoria was the noon-hour organ recital by Geoffrey Thornburn in Christ Church Cathedral.

Of the 100 in attendance, the man who came as he was in light blue shorts might well have been downright chilly in the stone sanctuary.

At this third of the Saturday summer recitals, Mr. Thornburn illustrated the rich manifold powers of a church organ — to exult, as in Bach's In Dulce Jubilo and to meditate, as in S. Karg-Elert's O God, Thou Faithful God.

If applause had been in order the audience would surely have demanded a repetition of Mr. Thornburn's rendition of a piece called Tuba Tune by New Zealand composer C. S. Land.

The melody line of this charming and lively novelty was alternately produced on state trumpet stop and choir mutation stop.

Children in the audience, including the tenor of tons, were impressed into silence by the sounds and surroundings throughout the 45-minute program.

Geoffrey Thornburn is assistant organist at the Cathedral. Next Saturday noon, a former assistant organist, David Palmer, will perform. Mr. Palmer is now a student at the University of Michigan.

The recitals continue at 12:15 p.m. Saturday through August.

Bladen Report Due October

TORONTO (CP) — The report of the Bladen commission on the financing of higher education in Canada will be published Oct. 1 on schedule, economist Vincent Bladen, who heads the commission, said Saturday.

The commission was established in February, 1964, by the Canadian Universities Foundation to "study and report and make recommendations on the financing of the universities and colleges of Canada with particular reference to the decade ending 1975."

Menzies will be 71 Dec. 20. He previously has stated he would never fight an election after he turned 70.

The next Australian general election will be late in 1966, on the eve of Menzies' 72nd birthday.

He said he did not know what the result of his thoughts on the future would be, but he would make a statement when he had reached a decision.

Political observers here think that Menzies' retirement could cause some bitter fighting inside the Australian Liberal party, which he has led for more than 25 years.

FAVORS APPOINTMENT

Although he has indicated that he favors the appointment of federal treasurer Harold Holt as his replacement, the outcome is by no means certain.

A number of other prominent Liberals, including External Affairs Minister Paul Hasluck, have been mentioned as possible contenders for the post of prime minister.

Another could well be John McEwen, leader of the coalition minority Country party and deputy prime minister.

In answer to a question, he told a reporter: "Any self-respecting man of my age must give thought to his future and to his duties and I am doing that."

No Hasty Action Likely in Strike

OTTAWA (CP)—The federal government promised Saturday not to take any precipitous action against striking postal workers.

At a hastily-called press conference to outline the government's position, Revenue Minister E.J. Benson said the mediator in the postal dispute, Solicitor-General Pennell, urged striking postal workers to return to work. He said the Anderson telegram also asked the postal unions and the workers to return to work to await his report.

COURTENAY—Postal workers walked off the job here Saturday, to join the spreading national strike. There are no carriers in Courtenay, but the inside workers are picketing.

Judge J.C. Anderson, had asked all parties not to take such action. The request came in a telegram.

NO ACTION

Mr. Benson, a member of the three-man cabinet committee set up to deal with the strike, said his government had advised Judge Anderson no such action will be taken.

Mr. Benson said he hoped to have Judge Anderson's report on the dispute within a week or ten days at the latest. Once it is received, the government will take prompt action. He did not commit himself, however, to following the recommendations.

Mr. Benson, flanked by Postmaster-General Tremblay, said

Mr. Benson said his committee is willing to talk with the postal unions anytime, although it has not yet been invited to attend a Monday meeting in Ottawa of the union executives.

Asked about what kind of action the government could take in the event of a prolonged strike, Mr. Benson said "We don't want to threaten people. We want to carry out our duties to the people of Canada to provide service."

Mr. Benson said he did not want to embark on any action similar to that taken in the 1957 railway strike when Parliament passed legislation to get strikers back to work. This kind of action, including use of troops to deliver the mail was not the kind of action the government wants to take.

Mr. Benson said the government is willing to have collective bargaining for all the civil service. He did not elaborate.

Postal employees had asked

High-Wire Breaks, Man Lives

TORONTO (CP)—A high-wire performer was injured Saturday night when the wire he was walking collapsed during the police games at Toronto's Varsity Stadium.

The performer, identified as James Cochran of Toronto, was taken to hospital where his condition is reported as satisfactory.

Small Plane Believed Lost

TRENTON, Ont. (CP)—A single engine aircraft is believed missing somewhere between Picton, south of Belleville, and Toronto. The identity of the pilot of the aircraft, or the number of persons aboard was unknown.

Viet Cong Close In Post Overrun Four Miles From Saigon

SAIGON (AP)—A district headquarters and outpost only four miles from Saigon were attacked by the Viet Cong early Sunday, a U.S. military spokesman said.

Radio contact with the post was lost, and it was believed to have been overrun.

The spokesman said the Viet Cong opened up with mortars on the district headquarters at Binh Chanh, four miles west-southwest of the capital. A ground assault followed, he said.

No further contact had been reported with the outpost at mid-morning, the spokesman said. Details were sketchy but it was believed the outpost had been manned by only a few popular force or regional troops.

Flare planes and armed helicopters were sent to the area during the early morning hours, but there was no immediate report as to whether they made contact with the Viet Cong.

At least one civilian was reported to have been killed and two others wounded.

American Arrested In Saigon Murders

SAIGON (AP)—An American sought in connection with the fatal shooting of the chief American advisor to the Vietnamese police force was arrested early Sunday, reliable information reported.

The man hunted in a citywide search since the shooting Friday night had been identified by Vietnamese police as Robert Kimball, a native of Utah.

Slain Friday night at his Saigon home in what was believed to be a crime of passion were Jack E. Ryan, chief of the U.S. Aid Mission's public safety division, and a Vietnamese woman, Mrs. Nguyen Thi Hai.

WORKED TOGETHER

On Saturday police launched a search for Kimball, distributing pictures of him and questioning his acquaintances. He worked in the same U.S. operations missions division with Ryan.

While there was no official announcement immediately, reliable informants said Kimball was arrested at dawn at his home near downtown Saigon.

Anti-American Consulate Target Of Greeks

SALONIKA, Greece (AP)—A new mass demonstration organized by pro-Communists erupted in Greece Saturday night and aimed against the United States President Johnson and the Greek royal family.

More than 5,000 youths, called out by the Salonika Students Union and the pro-Communist Lambrakis Youth Movement, marched through the streets of this northern city passing the U.S. consulate.

They screamed:

"Down with marionettes of Johnson, the murderer."

"Pull out of NATO."

"Down with the Hierarchy."

This last was an open slur on King Constantine's mother, Queen Mother Frederika, who was born in Germany and as a child was a member of the Hitler youth movement.

Heavy police units were out in force in case of a new eruption.

Mariner Winds Up With Bonus Shot

PASADENA, Calif. (AP)—Mariner 4 finished sending back all 21 of its hoped-for Mars photos Saturday—and a bit of a bonus—Edad as well.

After an interval of sending back engineering information, the recorder was expected to switch tracks automatically and start sending all pictures over again, starting with No. 1.

Mariner was 142,500,000 miles from earth when it completed its photo transmission.

The historic pictures were taken by the spacecraft's television camera during a 25-minute period July 14 when Mariner 4 passed within 6,118 miles of Mars.

'She Was a Fat Baby'

Thailand Beauty Wins Miss Universe Contest

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP)—An exotic raven-haired beauty nicknamed "Pook" for fat—Apsara Hongakula of Thailand—was crowned Miss Universe for 1965 Saturday night.

She posed out the Finnish entrant, Virpi Miettinen of Helsinki, a blue-eyed blonde model who could assume the role of Miss Universe in case the winner cannot carry out her duties.

Second runner-up was Miss U.S.A. of Columbus, Ohio. Sweden's blonde artist, Ingrid Norrman, was third runner-up, and Anna Schult of Amsterdam, Holland, was fourth.

The 18-year-old, black-eyed student from Bangkok was one of the most popular contestants with 8,000 people watching the pageant in Miami Beach auditorium. Millions more watched on home television sets.

"I never dreamed of this," said Apsara. She had been nervous and did not eat lunch before the final competition.

Apsara is the first Miss Universe from Thailand and the first from her country to compete in this pageant in many years.

Her parents, Col. and Mrs. Perm Hongakula, were in the audience. Her father is an officer in the Thai Royal Air Force.

"Apsara was a fat baby," her mother said. "That's why we named her Pook."

Apsara was instructed by Thailand's Queen Sirikit on how to act, how to walk and how to wear her hair before she came to the pageant.

"My queen will be very happy. I can't believe it all," said Apsara.

Immediately following her crowning and queen's walk down a long runway, other contestants ran to her side with kisses and congratulations.

She is 5 feet 4, a shapely 35-23-35, and weighs 118 pounds—minus some she lost during rehearsals.

Two Miners Die In Fire

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP)—Two miners, trapped far underground by a coal mine fire, were found dead Saturday night when reached by rescue workers.

The men had barricaded themselves in a small room about 1,000 feet from the blast which broke out about 6:30 a.m. Saturday at the Arkwright No. 1 mine of Christopher Coal Co. near Morgantown.

The victims, Charles Garrett, 36, and Jesse J. Hoss, were found huddled together about seven miles back from the mine entrance. The two died either from smoke inhalation or carbon monoxide poisoning.

Ex-Presidential Adviser Schlesinger Writes:

Kennedy Wanted Rusk Replaced

NEW YORK (AP)—Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr. says in the current Life magazine that the late President John F. Kennedy had decided in 1963 to replace Dean Rusk as state secretary after the 1964 U.S. presidential election.

In an installment from a forthcoming book, former presidential adviser Schlesinger does not say whom Kennedy had picked for the job, if anybody.

"He always had the dream that someone like Robert McNamara (now defense secretary) might some day take command and make the department a vigorous partner in the enterprise of foreign relations," Schlesinger says.

Schlesinger says Kennedy came to his decision about Rusk reluctantly, and earlier had rejected suggestions that he be replaced.

Kennedy, Schlesinger says, had chosen Rusk after a single talk with him.

"Kennedy remained impressed by Rusk's capacity to define but grew increasingly depressed by his reluctance to decide," Schlesinger writes.

However, when it was suggested in 1963 that Rusk be replaced, Schlesinger says Kennedy declared: "I can't do that to Rusk; he is such a nice man."

"He was also an able and useful man," Schlesinger says.

"and most compelling perhaps was Kennedy's feeling that dismissal of his secretary of state would constitute too severe a comment on his original judgment."

A reorganization of the state department in November, 1961, including the replacement of Chester Bowles by George Ball as No. 2 man, "somehow improved the situation," Schlesinger writes.

The assignment of W. Averell Harriman as assistant secretary for far eastern affairs, Schlesinger says, "gave far eastern policy a coherence and force which it had not had for years."

But the department remained a puzzle to Kennedy to the end, Schlesinger says. "No one ran it: Rusk, Ball and Harriman constituted a loose triumvirate . . . and, passing things back and forth among themselves, managed to keep a few steps ahead of the crisis," he writes.

"By the autumn of 1963 (the year he was assassinated) the president had reluctantly made up his mind to allow Rusk to leave after the 1964 election and to seek a new secretary of state."

Lions' Good Schedule May Crack Gate Mark

VANCOUVER — A favorable schedule combined with the added gate appeal of being Canadian football champions appears to give B.C. Lions a chance to break their own

Canadian attendance record this season. Lions will play seven of their eight home games on weekends, four of them on Saturday nights and three on Sunday afternoons. The other game is on a Monday evening.

ONE LONG WAIT

Only slow in the home schedule, which is otherwise well spaced, is a 23-day period between their sixth and seventh games, Oct. 2 and Oct. 24, a period during which the Lions make their two-game swing in the Eastern Conference.

The record the Lions have to beat is the 238,302 fans they drew to their eight Empire Stadium games last season. That averages out to 32,750 fans per game, a figure which needs practically capacity crowds for each game to better. Season-ticket sales are now approaching 22,000.

HOW TO SPEAK

On Tuesday, Aug. 3, the provincial government will hold a dinner for players, managers and coaches. Guest speaker will be Gordie Howe, Detroit Red Wings hockey star.

Marr Ahead At Hartford

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP)—Dave Marr, a 31-year-old Texan, moved into the 54-hole lead Saturday in the $70,000 Insurance City Open Golf Tournament.

Marr, who started the third round with 134, finished with three birdies on the last five holes for his 70 and a nine-under-par total of 204.

There were three players one stroke off the pace—Johnny Pott, Tom Weiskopf and Bob Goalby, the 13-hole leader.

Soccer Sets Deadline For Entries

Victoria and District Soccer League has started lining up its clubs for next season.

Deadline is Aug. 16, when all entries must be submitted to a meeting at Newmarket Hall. Second division meets at 7 and the first division at 8.

Sandy Paul has been re-elected president, with George Barnes, Scotty Robinson and Ed Viggers returning as vice-presidents and Jack Metcalfe as secretary-treasurer.

Important Name Is Baseball Aim

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP)—Odds are 3 to 1 that the next commissioner of baseball will be a man not connected with the game.

This deduction is based on the number of candidates still in the running to succeed Ford Frick, who will retire at the end of the season after 14 years in office.

According to owners John Galbreath of Pittsburgh Pirates and John Fetzer of Detroit Tigers, the special two-man committee named to screen candidates, the original list of 150 eligibles has been trimmed to 20, of which "four or five" are baseball men.

That would leave about 15 names in law, politics or business.

None of the names was made public but Gable Paul, president of Cleveland Indians, said the list included "some very important persons."

Munn Loses in Playoff Misses $200,000 Meet

VANCOUVER — Dick Munn of Victoria just missed winning a berth in the World Open golf tournament here yesterday while Al Mengert of Tacoma was rolling in with a 68 to win the B.C. Open.

Munn, getting a break when Vancouver's Al Nelson blew to a last-round 83, shot a 74 yesterday to tie the Vancouver's Lyle

Crawford and Len Collett as low Canadian scorers at 76.

The three went on to a sudden-death playoff for the Canadian spot in the $300,000 World Open in Sutton, Mass., and Collett settled it early, winning with the only par of the first playoff hole.

Crawford and Collett had both shot last-round 72s, and shared seventh place with Munn in the B.C. tourney. Nelson, the host pro who had fired rounds of 70 and 63, wound up tied for 10th place at 220.

MENGERT BINS AWAY
But this tournament belonged to Mengert, the Tacoma pro who was a marvel of consistency throughout the 54 holes. He opened with a 67, then strung consecutive 68s for a three-stroke victory over Vancouver amateur Johnny Johnston, who matched him in the final two rounds but could never make up ground lost with his opening-day 70 although it was two under par.

First-round leader Tom Story, an amateur from Seattle, shot a 71 yesterday for third place at 210, one stroke better than Tacoma pro Al Feldman.

Two highly-regarded B.C. players finished 1st off the pace: Vancouver pro Stan Leonard, the pre-tournament favorite, shot a 72 yesterday for a 218 total and Bill Wakeham, the former Victoria amateur now playing professionally out of Calgary, had a 74 for 225.

Seattle pro Ben Doyle played a strong iron game yesterday for a 69, tying professionals Bill Eggers of Portland, Harry Umbreit of Seattle and Joe Golia of Aberdeen, Wash., for 211 and sixth place.

No Playoff Today For Second Place

Century Inn will get the trophy today, Ron Brousseau the batting trophy and two players yet to be named, possibly Geoff Hett and Bob Lowe, will be awarded the most valuable player and most sportsmanlike trophies.

Had Sooko won, a playoff would have been held today with Luckies to decide the runner-up spot. However, it would have meant little as Sooko and Luckies meet in the semi-finals in any event.

TOMORROW
Playoffs start tomorrow at 6:45 p.m. with the league-champion Century Inn meeting fourth-place McLaren's in a best-of-three semi. Sooko and Luckies start their semi-final on Tuesday.

Morrisons, who will enter junior playdowns, jumped off to a 7-1 lead after four innings, and then barely stayed off late Sooko rallies. Two runs came in when Tim Goudie hit his 10th home run in a three-run fifth inning and Sooko just missed with a two-run rally in the last inning, quelled by Rolfe Clark. An exhibition game today will be headed off by trophy presentations starting at 2 p.m. Century Inn will get the league trophy, Ron Brousseau the batting trophy and two players yet to be named, possibly Geoff Hett and Bob Lowe, will be awarded the most valuable player and most sportsmanlike trophies.

Andrews Wins, Loses In Rifle Shoot-Offs

Eric Andrews of 5th RCA won the Navy Cup and failed by only one point to make a clean sweep of the available trophies in the first day's shooting in the Victoria and District Rifle Association's annual two-day meet at Heale's range yesterday.

Andrews, who leads the aggregate scoring by five points in a field of more than twenty, shot his way out of a four-way tie with Jim Heister, Bob Walker and Chuck Hobson, all with 916 100 for the Navy Trophy.

Earlier in the day, Andrews dropped the President's Cup, 23-22, in a shoot-off with Fran Moore of CSRA after each scored 951x100 at the 200 and 300 yard mounds.

Up for grabs in today's shooting is the F. W. Francis Trophy and the Colonel's Trophy for the highest aggregate.

We know Ale is different from beer, because we brew both. Beer yeast works willingly at the bottom of the vat. But our stubborn Ale strain starts its career at the top. Pioneer Church Marks 71 Years of Service

By MILDRED KURTZ

PARKSVILLE — A pioneer log church will mark 71 years of service to generations of congregation members Monday.

St. Anne's Church, French Creek, will remember its past in celebration of the festival of its patron saint.

The history of St. Anne's, the first church to be built in this district, really goes back to 1883 for that was when the idea of having a church in this area was formed in the mind of the Rev. Charles Edward Cooper.

He had recently arrived from England, and had been appointed by Bishop William Perrin as missionary for Englishman River, French Creek, Errington, Little Qualicum and Nanooks Bay.

Mr. Cooper journeyed to Parksville from Nanaimo by horse-drawn stage and consulted with the settlers about the best site for a church.

French Creek was at that time the most central point and it was chosen as the site. Mr. Cooper bought the property himself and presented it to the district through the Anglican Synod at Victoria.

The first work bee to clear the site was held in April 1884. After four months of hard work, hauling logs from nearby woods with oxen, the contractor John McKinnon and many volunteers from the district saw their work completed.

It was a proud day for Rev. Charles Cooper and all who had helped to build the church when it was consecrated by Bishop Perrin on St. Anne's Day, July 26, 1884.

Monday there will be two services in the picturesque log church. At 10 a.m. there will be a celebration of Holy Communion and at 7:30 p.m. a service of evening prayer.

Rev. Eric Blackstock, vicar of St. Anne's and St. Edmunds, has announced that special guests for the day will be the Rev. Stanley Leech and Mrs. Leech of All Saints, Alberni.

Mr. Leech will be celebrant at the morning service and will preach the sermon at the evening service.

A short organ recital will be given by Dudley Wickert of Parksville prior to the evening service. The first ringing of the "old church bell" will be sounded 15 minutes before the service and the regular ringing at two minutes before.

A coffee or tea hour will follow at Parksville parish hall to provide a social get-together for local residents and visitors to the district.

Mr. Blackstock hopes that this St. Anne's Day will be a special day of pilgrimage for those who have known St. Anne's in the past and now reside in other parts of the Island.

Nanaimo Man Battles Pesticides

'Give the Birds a Chance'

By PETER TAYLOR

NANAIMO—Quiet campaign is in progress at the top of Westwood Road here against the use of insecticides and pesticides.

The fight is undertaken by retired Parkville farmer Bill Pemberton. He fears the effect on wild birds.

Mr. Pemberton has been observing birds since the age of eight. He does not profess to be an expert ornithologist. He is a man who has lived close to nature all his life and is now concerned at the decreasing number of wild birds seen in the British Columbia countryside.

Much Blame

A large part of the blame, he said, must be laid on insecticides. He is especially alarmed at their use by large companies which spray brush along the roadways.

In an effort to stop this practice he has written letters to the recreation and conservation minister and insists he claims more mechanical brush cutters have been used.

The danger from insecticides stems from maggots and other insects eating the chemical and these in turn being eaten by the birds, he said.

Near Lake

The Pembertons live within a few hundred yards of Westwood Lake, popular resort for Nanaimo residents. They have turned over their garden to their winged friends, and to almost every tree is attached some form of attraction for homeless or hungry birds.

All bird houses are home-made, some are conventionally square while others are of Swiss A-frame design, they are always made of unpainted wood, because Mr. Pemberton believes they will not be used unless they look natural.

He is not concerned if a new house is not used for a year or two, because he has found birds are shy, by nature, and like to become accustomed to an object over a long period of time.

Bird Houses

His bird houses range from two feet eight inches tall with a two and half inch entry hole for a wood duck, down to a six inch square house with seven-eighths inch hole for a wren.

At this time of year he leaves his bird kingdom to fend for itself, but in winter he spreads out food on trays on the property. He encourages friends and neighbors to do the same, and is always willing to give away a bird house to any friend who asks for one.

Mr. Pemberton has proved through constant observation that every bird has a task to perform. He credits the lack of flies around the house to the birds.

Sealows Help

"Ornithologists have been able to prove," Mr. Pemberton said, "in one season a pair of sealows will consume 1,000,000 mosquitoes."

He himself has spent a whole day watching a swallow family, and seen the female make 87 feeding trips to the nest.

Mr. Pemberton gets up at 5:45 a.m. to listen "to a beautiful concert every morning, and I've heard a lot of concerts in my time."

Puts Out Feed

This is also the time of day when he puts out his feed of hollowed out coconut shells, sweet mixed with rye, oatmeal and bran to be crumbled into hollow logs and breadcrumbs and out flakes on trays.

Small boys have learned to come to the old gentleman with enquiries and he makes use of two years of a veterinary college in Glasgow to help injured birds brought to him.

Neighborhood boys with slingshots or BB guns have experienced reprimands from Mr. Pemberton.

He would like to see more instruction in nature study in school: "We should teach the children the glory of keeping things alive, everything today seems to emphasize destruction and the building-up of guns."

"I did all the killing I ever wanted to do in the first war, now I want to see nature survive. We should help nature along instead of trying to buck it with pesticides."

Mr. Pemberton has identified 20 different species that have visited his property, and many more have come that he has not been able to classify.

Lake Attracts

Westwood Lake helps to attract the birds, he said, while the cries of bathers on the beach and the noise from traffic in no way deter his "visitors."

"The birds are the least concerned with all the speed and madness of today."

Mr. Pemberton commented: "If I can save the life of one singing bird I'll do it!"

Nanaimo Alderman Charges:

Sewage Polluting Gold River

NANAIMO—Alderman Ted Barsby charged Friday that raw sewage from an industrial camp is polluting Gold River on Vancouver Island's west coast.

He spoke at the weekly Rotary Club luncheon in the Malaspina Hotel, referring to the future pulp mill and town-site.

"The Gold River camp is pumping raw sewage straight into this beautiful river, and the town-site probably will also," he declared.

"We need a pollution act with more teeth in it. We just can't afford to continue in this manner," said the alderman.

Ald. Barsby also criticized lack of proper clearing on the High Arrow, Mica Creek and Duncan dam sites. He maintained that the work now being carried out by B.C. Hydro is too little and too late.

they were in the boat taking pictures, a construction crew was taking the craft across the lake when it blew up, killing one man.

Road Building Rough In Strathcona Park

By JOY HUNTLEY

CAMPBELL RIVER—Men and machines are pushing a road through rugged country in Strathcona Park along the shore of Buttle Lake.

Construction workers are building 22 miles of road up the east side of the lake to service Western Mines operation. The job is long and hard.

TRAILER CAMP

A 40-unit trailer construction camp is set at the end of the existing Buttle Lake road.

Soon the contractor will establish a camp at the south end of the road as well.

Of the 22 miles to be built, 17 are inside Strathcona Park.

TREE FRINGE

The highway will be built to high specifications, and all efforts will be made to maintain a fringe of trees between the road and the lake.

The construction company says right-of-way clearing will be kept to a minimum to preserve the natural beauty of Buttle Lake.

Labor Council Joins Schools' Land Fight

NANAIMO—The labor council here will ask the B.C. Federation of Labor to support a resolution from Nanaimo School Board, demanding provincial legislation to provide school space in subdivisions.

The school board wants a law that will make subdivisions put away a block of land in any new developments for public use.

Labor council secretary-treasurer Arnold Smith said he was concerned because subdivisions are springing up in unorganized areas around Nanaimo.

"There is no park land for children," he said.

As an example he referred to the Lynburn estate.

"Children have to play on a private golf course," he said.

Mr. Smith pointed out "eventually these subdivisions will become part of Nanaimo."

Chamber Calls Talks

By RUTH McKELLAR

CUMBERLAND—Regional districts and hospitals will be debated Monday at 8 p.m. when the Chamber of Commerce holds a public information meeting in the Cumberland Recreation Institute.

The Chamber hopes to dampen a controversy over the advantages of publicly and privately-owned regional hospitals.

William Henderson will speak on regional districts, how they are formed and what they can do. Ad Clement and C. A. Cousins will speak on hospitals.

OPEN TO ALL

The meeting is open to all Comox Valley residents.

Chamber president Robert McKellar said the meeting was called because many residents seem to be confused over the second question in the two-part referendum.

This question is: "Are you in favor of granting financial aid up to $250,000 to construct St. Joseph's Hospital at Comox?"

RESIDENTS' VIEWS

Some residents apparently think a yes answer to the second question will provide a public hospital at Comox. They also thought they would be guaranteed a tax assessment of 1½ mills to do the financing.

But the hospital is privately owned, and the mill rate is not specifically set out.

CHAMBER'S STAND

Chamber president Charles Pearson said the chamber generally supports publicly owned enterprise, and if for no other reason, the chamber would support a publicly owned hospital.

SUMMER ADVENTURE means prized catch of rockfish for eight-year-old Brent Clark of Ottawa. See Party Boat Fun Fishing on Page 16.—JIM RYAN

The skipper and I will soon celebrate our tenth wedding anniversary. Ten long years have I been nursemaid, charwoman and chief cook and bottle-washer aboard the good ship Atlanta. I have scraped her bottom of barnacles, I have gloried in copper paint, I have sandpapered and painted and then sandpapered again.

I have wallowed in flat calms during the gas-rationing days. Patiently I have sat in the cockpit for hours on end waiting for the faintest whisper of breeze to waft us into a safe anchorage. I have been seasick in a lusty following gale, wind shrieking in the rigging, spray drenching the boat and us too, sheets taut and straining, the dinghy out on a 60-foot line surging up on the crest of a 10-foot wave to smash broadside into the stern of the boat. I have cooked steak and onions on a hot summer day with the engine going and the gasoline stove stinking. I have drunk overproof rum before breakfast. I have been soaking wet and shivering cold. I might go on endlessly but suffice it to say I have sailed. But for a real honest-to-goodness sailing adventure I think I can look back on my honeymoon cruise as the ne plus ultra in sailing that it has yet been my fortune to experience.

The skipper and I were married very quietly as I had been married before. Easter was early that year and the skipper had arranged to take a couple of weeks off from the office for our honeymoon cruise.

Now I had never sailed in my life before. I wasn't entirely a city slicker as a good deal of my girlhood had been spent on the various lakes in Ontario where we had camped and taken long canoe trips. But I certainly didn't realize what sailing on a small primitive boat meant.

I guess I was a sissy-pants. I liked my bath in the morning, warm and fragrant. I liked well-manicured hands and a weekly visit to the beauty parlor was a must with me.

When the skipper suggested that our honeymoon be spent aboard Atlanta I welcomed the idea. It sounded romantic—white sails scudding before a gentle breeze, anchoring beneath the stars in a lonely cove, listening to the chatter of the kingfishers and the plop of fish—yes, I liked the idea.

Friday afternoon of our wedding found us brushing off comfetti and saying goodbye, at the yacht club dock, to friends and relations. We were just about to board the dinghy, preparatory to rowing out to the moored Atlanta when the best man came rushing down the dock, attached to him by a dirty bit of rope was the most ridiculous animal I had ever beheld. It looked like a dog and sounded and smelt like a dog, but its ancestors were so many and so varied that if you had confused it with a camel you wouldn't be far wrong. "Here, Aberdanial, here; good old boy," called the skipper, and with a bound the monstrosity landed in the dinghy.

"What on earth is that?" I asked in a faint voice. A loud woof was the only reply.

A light breeze was blowing and the skipper thought he'd get up sail. "Get up," said I, "I thought that was what you did to horses."

A faint haw-haw, then "Hold her up in stays," said he, handing me a bit of wood, now known as the tiller.

"Stays," I echoed. "I thought that was grandma's name for corns." No reply to this witticism. Finally the skipper managed to hoist sail and we were away. I thoroughly enjoyed it. The wind was favorable and not too lusty, and it seemed in no time we were entering the lovely island-dotted anchorage that is Silva Bay.

After a hot run the world looked rosy indeed and when the skipper announced that he would cook dinner as I probably didn't understand the intricacies of the gasoline stove I thought sailing a little bit of all right.

Next morning we were up bright and early. The skipper shaved, then to my horror peeled off his pyjamas and slashed overboard. Remember this was March. Apparently I was expected to do the same—overboard, I mean—. Well, never let it be said that I was a sissy; over I went. I came out a good deal faster than I went in.

"Think I'll drift down to Stewart Channel," remarked the skipper. "Might pick up a salmon."

The day was hot with no breath of air so we idled gently along on power, a fishing line strung over the side. Arrayed only in a pair of dirty shorts the skipper leaned over to kiss me when suddenly r-i-p and from stern to stern his shorts were rent. "A little mending job for you," he said, nonchalantly peeling them off. At this moment there was a sudden whine on the fishing line. "Get him! a big one!" yelled the skipper. "Pull up the dinghy and cast me off."

"But," I demurred, "you're naked."

"Shut up," he yelled again. "Cast me off."

Now he had previously instructed me as to what to do in case we struck a fish. So slowly I circled round the skipper nakedly standing up in the dinghy intent only on playing his fish. Then the engine died. Utter silence. On the morning air came the unmistakable pu-pu-pu of an approaching boat. As it drew nearer I saw that was an opulent gas yacht wearing an American flag. Slowly it drew nearer the oblivious skipper. Then on the calm morning air was borne a loud female American voice: "I didn't know the Indians in these parts still went around naked."

The days passed and despite my being an obvious tyro I thoroughly enjoyed myself. I even grew fond of Aberdanial for he was a well-behaved dog, trained to distinguish between a telephone pole and the mast.

"Think we'll drop in on George and Gertie," one day remarked the skipper. Now I knew this unique couple but slightly. George was a retired scientist of sorts, attached to the biological station at Nanaimo, always intent on experiments. Weird and wonderful were the meals concocted by George; you never knew if you were eating jelly fish or barnacles. Gertie was the perfect wife and mother—always encouraging George and protecting her brood of three or four babies and their dog, a dog not unlike Aberdanial in ancestry but of the opposite sex.

When we arrived at their home in Departure Bay sounds of merriment greeted us. "A party, by jove," cried the skipper, and such it proved to be. It was Uncle Adelbert, being seventyish, seated on the chesterfield, a pretty girl on each knee, loudly rendering his version of Blow the Man Down.

The party waxed warm and furious. Along about midnight Uncle Ad. complained of being hungry. "Do go and make some sandwiches," said Gertie to me. "I must feed baby—take anything you can find in the kitchen." So I raided the ice box of lettuce and tomatoes and a large blue bowl of meat paste and made an imposing platter of sandwiches.

Next morning I woke up feeling slightly the worse for wear. After the skipper had brought me a cup of tea I went down to the kitchen. Pandemonium reigned. Babies yelled, George grumbled, and the dogs howled. "Here George, hold Petunia while I stir the porridge — for heaven's sake Arasthusa, shut up! oh, darn those dogs anyway — the poor brutes are hungry; where on earth did I put that blue bowl of doggie dinner I left out last night?"

"Blue bowl," I echoed. Then sank down on the nearest chair. "I don't think I want any breakfast, thank you," I said with finality.

MOP-UP TIME

Next day we were starting for Pender Harbor, the Venice of the Coast. Before leaving, George presented the skipper with a sack of giant barnacles he had dredged up with the station boat. I was a little dubious of this delicacy, but George assured me that he had eaten them and they were much better than the finest crab meat.

Despite the various adventures that seemed to dog our footsteps I was thoroughly enjoying my honeymoon cruise. And the glorious sail across Georgia Strait into the winding channels of Pender Harbor did much to enhance my opinion. We fetched up at Garden Bay to find, even at this early date, scores of visiting American and Canadian boats tied up at the wharf and anchored off. It was nearing supper time and the skip suggested that I might like to try my hand at a meal of barnacles. George had instructed us how to cook them and by now I was familiar with the temperament of the stove. The skipper went off to chit-chat with old cronies aboard various boats. Aberdanial lay down beside me with an anxious look at the cooking.

I have mentioned before that I was dubious of barnacles as fare for dinner and when they were cooked I liked the look of them even less. "Try it on the dog," was an old bromide but I might as well be on the safe side, so I dished out a plateful for Aberdanial which he ate with

STRICTLY for THE BIRDS

Story and Pictures
By CECIL CLARK

Unafraid at 20 inches.

Bird watchers, as you probably know, come in all ages and sizes. From young men with transistor radios on local beaches to oldsters in the woods with binoculars. For the latter, of course, the interest is strictly feathered.

Some bona fide bird watchers have been distinguished world figures, like wartime general Lord Alanbrooke with his singular faculty for switching his sights from warfare to warblers. Then of course there was the notorious Mr. Alger Hiss whose intimate knowledge of the prothonotary warbler was a factor in slamming the cell door behind him!

For my own part I have to confess that it's a hobby that stirs me with less than mild enthusiasm. Except on rare occasions when photography enters into it. Like recently when I got the tip from my local friend Harrold Rourke that his First World War buddy, Charlie Stronach, seemed to be making friends with humming birds up at Wellington.

This of course I had to see, preferably through the Rolle's viewing lens, so hied me up to what was once the old Dunsmuir farm lying in a pleasant valley about five or six miles north of Nanaimo.

It was as I passed what I thought was the local golf course that I stopped to ask direction of the greenkeeper, only to discover it was Charlie surveying his lawn! Which, along with his house that lay back from the road, gave me the hint that Charlie's 30 years in the turkey business had been in the main successful.

On closer acquaintance, over a cup of coffee, I found him to be a rugged and kindly Aberdonian whose pleasant, Nanaimo-born wife, bore the interesting Gaelic name of Sivris, which seemed to be in keeping with her maiden name of MacDonald.

Charlie at first was quite apologetic that I'd "come on the wrong day."

"They haven't shown up," he remarked, but as I followed his gaze to the hanging baskets close to the house I glimpsed at least four or five humming birds darting to and fro, which in my book seemed to be a crowd. Especially when they were inclined to stick around. Charlie, it seems, was accustomed to see 15 or 20 gathered.

He told me he first got interested in them when he hung up some moss-lined hanging flower baskets. Later, when they dripped fuchsia blossoms, along came the humming birds. It wasn't long before he invested in a few feeders, long glass tubes with a tiny angled outlet. These he fills with a 50-50 solution of sugar and water, colored scarlet with a vegetable dye. Hooked to the baskets, they have a customer every few minutes.

"They come around like bees," is the way Charlie puts it.

"How often do you fill the feeders?" I asked. "Oh, on a busy day," he remarked, "maybe four times. That's about two cups of liquid for each feeder."

As we spoke, every now and again a tiny feathered morsel, flashing colors of ruby and emerald green, would z-z-zing in for a taste of nectar. Apparently they have grown quite accustomed to Charlie and his wife, and now even stand for his outstretched finger below them. In fact not only stand for it, stand on it!

"When they are about to alight on your finger," he told me, "it's just like a tiny fan blowing. Then when they settle you don't feel anything. No weight at all."

He told me with interest how he'd found one of their nests nearby, then later saw them hatch out. "Repulsive little things when they're just out," he said with a grin. "Like little gray garden slugs." He was amazed too, at their strange ability to fly straight from the nest. I could almost sense that Charlie was falling into the pattern. Becoming a bird watcher.

From a photographic point of view, of course, it was an interesting occasion. For you don't often get humming birds posing for pictures. I leaned against a porch post close enough to a feeder to shoot within three-foot range. Depth of field would ordinarily have baffled me had it not been for the fact the hummers poise in the same spot to feed. Later I discovered that a 500th of a second didn't quite still the wing motion, but electronic flash (at about an 800th, cooled with a layer of Kleenex) let you count the feathers in each outspread wing. Which was something to know.

I also discovered in my brief hour's study the truth of the saying that the humming bird is probably the most pugnacious of the feathered tribe. As soon as an intruder appears, they zip round and beat him off. I noticed when this happened, and attacker and attacked faced up to each other, it was the only occasion when they fanned out their barred tail feathers.

Whether it was part of their quick manoeuvre or a display of anger, I leave to the more scientific mind. As I watched their lightning arrival and departure, there was something about their body outline that vaguely reminded me of something. Then I got it! A fighter plane, a Spitfire!

It was a very interesting session, thanks to the kindly and accommodating Stronachs, and in a way reminded me of the only other occasion when an uncaged bird went through his paces in front of my lens. That was the day I met George, on an afternoon a few years ago when we dropped in for a casual visit with our old friends Howard and Grace Bell on St. Patrick Street. Grace, if you haven't yet met her, is one of the bird experts of the local natural history society, and travels on and off the Island taping bird calls. In her more whimsical moments she always reminds me slightly of Beatrice Lillie.

As it turned out George was a robin. On the young side, probably he'd fallen out of his nest to be retrieved by either Howard or Grace, something they are endlessly doing. Anyway after that George was always around. In the craziest sort of way.

To meet George we all trooped out in the garden, and Grace looking skyward as if for inspiration called out: "George! Come here, George!" In answer to his name, there whipped into view this robin, to circle our heads, then perched on a toolshed roof and eye us reflectively.

"He likes worms," said Howard in his off hand way, and idly selecting a digging fork, made a tentative stab at a flower bed. No sooner had the fork hit the ground than George zeroed in to land on Howard's shoulder. There he perched, to watch the digging process until a worm appeared.

Finally we had the scene of George, perched on the handle of the upright fork, being fed by each of us in turn. As we did so the vagrant thought passed my mind that I'd read somewhere that some birds eat their weight in food every day. Which, if true, meant that George was either a natural born glutton, or out to break the birdland record. Anyway he was stacking away worms like a kid does popcorn at a Saturday morning movie!

With four adults, a child, and the nose of the Bell's dog all within a foot of him, I sensed of course that, as far as a camera was concerned, George couldn't care less. In fact, it seemed, that

by URSULA JOPP

It is more than 40 years now since the sign Tapping Road first appeared at Patricia Bay and few today may be aware that this poet records the name of the first family to build a home on the land between Holy Trinity Church and the Patricia Bay Indian reservation.

Settling in the bay in 1920 also meant for the Charles Tappings many opportunities to talk with their native neighbors, to hear of the 400-pound black bear shot there within living memory, of elk shot in Saanich just one generation earlier and even to hear of the local version of mankind's so-widespread story of the Flood as told by the well-known Katie—a tale of the Great Chief who directed those who would listen to the building of a vast raft of cedar logs, of the thick cable of cedar bark that anchored it to the summit of Mount Tzouhalem, of the rains that fell and of the waters that rose.

This story had a special meaning for Charles Tapping, for he too had had to flee from mounting waters when at a depth of 17 feet in the well he was digging, he had opened up an underground stream, the waters of which still flow today and are recorded at the water rights office in the legislative buildings under the name of Tapping Spring.

That at Patricia Bay the well digger had practically to climb for his life before too bounteous water was in ironic contrast with his experience at his first Vancouver Island farm—a nine-acre section of the original Witty property at Metchoosin, where, between the years 1911 and 1920, he had, personally and by hand, dug six wells yet never found a secure supply for the needs of his house and of the chickens that were to give him and his wife their livelihood.

Chicken farming—that idyllic way of life that, in the years before the multi-thousand flocks of today, was dreamed of by many who envisioned a few hundred gaily cackling hens providing them with a life of fresh air and a modest independence.

How different the reality!

Reality for Charles Tapping, for instance, included ordering two pure-bred leghorn roosters from across the line, picking up the embarrassingly-nasty carton at the postoffice, and then, a few days later finding the two potential fathers, who by some misfortune had got into the same run, bloody and almost dead after a fearsome battle, and of having to resuscitate the two virile and expensive birds with eggs in brandy.

Reality meant also building a neat open-fronted shed and putting in it 100 laying hens—as well as half a ton of dry mixed feed—and then having the wind unsportingly blow from a direction not expected and topple the whole thing over, an experience that did not improve egg production of the birds and was fatal to the feed.

Marketing was another problem, as any who have ever done small-scale farming will know. Amazing as it is to hear today, many of the eggs sold in Victoria before the First World War, were imported from China, each egg coated in a clay that the buyer removed, and all packed in boxes of straw. Since the price at which these could be sold did not even allow for that modest independence, the Metchoosin Poultry Association was formed, Charles Tapping its active secretary, and with the help of R. H. Pooky, MLA for Esquimalt, by 1916 legislation had been passed directing all who used or sold Chinese eggs commercially to display this fact in letters not less than four inches high.

Another progressive move by the egg-producers of this area was an early use of cartons for marketing, and the stamping on each egg of the date on which it was laid.

Despite all the modern trends of co-operative and legislation, the Metchoosin at those days had not lost touch with pioneer times. Transportation was still provided, as it had been for decades, by the Rocky Point Stage, a rig owned and operated by the Parkers, a family that had settled in the Rocky Point area when a 1,200-acre farm was still within the means of one man.

Each day the two-horse vehicle (though not painted the color that now adorns it in the old Craigflower School grounds) would come bowling in from the Point, George Parker or his nephew Charles Ball at the reins, and two or three times a week they would stop at the entry to Wootton Road to pick up the crates of eggs from Charles' leghorns, a flock that eventually grew to 1,200. Twenty-five cents a case was the charge for transporting these to town, delivering them at the grocer's and returning the empties.

For passengers however the return fare was $1.50, a sum that made a trip to town infrequent enough to be a festivity, the stops at Colwood Corners and Four Mile House for a drop of something to keep out the cold on the long journey part of the fun. "Ladies, of course," says Charles Tapping, "did not go in, but sometimes a gentleman would bring out a glass of port for those who wanted it."

These were the days too when damage to the spokes of a buggy by a reckless motorist resulted in his being fined $50, the charge: "Passing a horse-drawn vehicle at more than 10 miles an hour."

With the First World War came a dislocation of markets that, while it lowered the price of eggs to 15 cents a dozen, raised that of wheat for feed to $30 a ton. Through this the Tappings struggled on, though an integrity that demanded that they should never get in debt often enough meant scantier board for humans than for birds.

Outside work became a necessity and so chicken-farmer became federal employee and worked on buildings being erected at William Head to house the Mongolian coolies who gathered here en route from China to France.

With smallpox sometimes developing during the Pacific crossing, the arrival of any cases meant vaccination of any new employees. This order resulted in an unusual experience for Charles Tapping when, by some bureaucratic mistake, he was vaccinated twice within six weeks and developed what seemed to be the disease itself—and so spent two happily idle weeks in isolation till the arrival of HMS Kent and a visit from her surgeon ended his holiday.

Another federal project was the gravity-feed pipeline from Langford that the increased population at William Head demanded. On this undertaking Tapping was potman, heating the lead for the joints—and also making 'sa in the middle of the day, and in a day when legality was not so sharply pursued Charles seems to remember make fences were in some places a strake lower after lunch.

This pleasant casualness also appears in the story of the "delicious coffee" on which Charles was congratulated by the ladies after he had served as helper at a community dance. "Probably it was the wigglers in the water we were forced to take from the rainbarrel that time," he grins, "Other times, other ways!"

With lack of water a continuous problem, when in 1920 two passersby made a good cash offer for the land it was easy for the Tappings, by now with an infant daughter, to decide to move.

Prime requisite for the new home was unquestionably water, an amenity that Patricia Bay seemed to offer and so the site 600 feet up what was to become Tapping Road was bought from the Columbia Land Company, then marketing land in connection with the British Columbia Electric Railway which had a spur running from its old Deep Cove line down into Patricia Bay—to the satisfaction of those arranging Sunday School picnics and so on.

Here the new settler erected his tent and then began to look about for best spot for a well. His Indian neighbors advised digging near where maples and cedars grew. So he did, but when at 17 feet he came once again on the hated hardpan, he began to think that both he and the natives were wrong. Disgusted, he struck at the old enemy beneath his feet . . . and, amazed, felt the iron of the crow-bar slide through his fingers, saw water begin to bubble up through the hole it had made.

Hurriedly he shouted for the ladder, nimbly made his escape. Up, up came the water . . . reached the top . . . overflowed the rim, and started to flow on a route that, he saw, would soon take it into the excavation he had just made for the basement of his new home. Quickly now Charles Tapping dug a ditch about a foot deep to divert the flow, and so was born Tapping Spring, source of supply a decade and more later for those others who now began to spend summers at the sunny bay.

But in the 1920s the Tappings still had the slope to themselves, their seclusion broken only by the arrival now and then of the Canara at the

OCTOGENARIAN FINDS FULL LIFE

Canadian National wharf or a chance meeting with some wanderer on the beach.

One such encounter led to an amusing discovery when the stranger who introduced himself as Sam McClure (prominent in city architectural circles for many years) proved to be not only a brother-in-law of the Donald McLeod who had in 1904 joined the staff at the London shipbrokers' office where Charles also worked as a youth, but also as the donor to McLeod, when he left Victoria for London, of the book "The Uses and Pleasures of Life" which McLeod in his turn had generously presented to Tapping when he too set out on a new life!

It took Fate nearly a quarter of a century before she got her chuckle out of that little plot—but perhaps Charles Tapping after all has the last laugh as he says: "And I don't suppose either of us ever read it."

So the quiet years went by, gardening or sometimes doing some building as others moved into the bay as word of warm water spread, but with the Second World War events of the world once more intruded and Charles Tapping again became a federal employee, this time on maintenance of buildings at service airport being constructed on the flat lands above Patricia Bay.

"Works and Bricks" was the name of this crew and a little poem in The Patrician, magazine of the R.A.F. in British Columbia, which in 1943 had Gerry Gosley as production manager, written under the name of Lofly (it could also have been C. T.) outlines their duties. The first of the 12 verses gives a general idea:

"We're 'Works and Bricks' just a bunch of hicks,
Who labor day by day.
We work and sweat, the things to fix
That always go astray."

Verse 4 suggests an emergency that probably really happened:

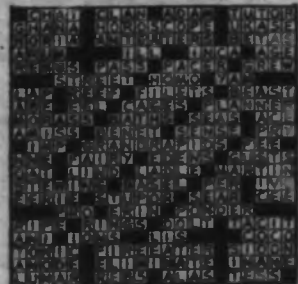

"On inspection morn, at break of dawn,
Some bloke, to ease the strain,
Chucks a handy rock, in the barrack block,
And smash goes a window pane."
Now comes "Lofly to the rescue:
"There's a frantic call, for the glazier small
With his putty and glass on clean;
He puts it right and out of sight
E'er the C. O. views the scene."

Then in 1945 the war was over. Two years later the death of his wife and a sudden opportunity to sell the house that had been their home for more than 25 years resulted in a move to Victoria to join his daughter, Winifred, already working in the city.

Here his naturally active temperament had outlet for some years in the cultivation of an acre of flowers on Ruby Road but when in 1954 he joined the Thermopylae Club, the man whose early years in a shipbrokers' office in the port of London had supplied him with so broad an acquaintance with the world of ships and the sea, found many uses for his knowledge, interest and imagination.

Though his 18 years with the club have been interrupted by two trips to Britain (on each of which he and Winifred have won first prize in the ship's Costume Ball on the Atlantic crossing) and by a few stays in hospital—one six weeks' long, but who's going to waste time discussing that?—the zeal he brings to his position of purser (secretary), the letters written to the nautical magazine Sea Breezes, the unflagging follow-up of all ensuing correspondence that so enriches the club's interests, all add up to one octogenarian at least who still finds life full of "Uses and Pleasures" and adds them too to those of others.

Answer to Last Week's Puzzle

AN ARTIST NAMED EMILY

By V. S. PATRIADACHE

I made the first of many happy visits to Victoria more than 50 years ago on a May day when it was decorated by nature with tree blossoms and flowers; the air was fresh and sweet, sharpened by a breeze from the Pacific.

Was I asked if I thought the city looked like a bit of old England?

I was.

Did I say 'yes'?

I did not.

I said I found it a delightful and easy-going place with a spice of the exotic Orient. Some eyebrows were raised at the word "exotic" but I stick to it. It was one of my first impressions.

It happened that on the day I arrived a shining white Japanese ship was moored at Outer Wharf and an officer in white uniform stood like a statue, beside the gangway, impervious to the grave inspection of a small Chinese boy in native dress who wore a red cap with a hole in the top through which came a stiff black pigtail standing up with a neat red bow at the end.

That was some number one; after that two Chinese came along with baskets of greens and vegetables hanging from a yoke on their shoulders.

A stroll up Government Street provided an imposing East Indian with a fiercely masculine face topped with a pink turban, and a group of Chinese children who ran off like chickens when I took out a camera. Going up a side street, I found the Temple where the impressive Buddha was enthroned surrounded by lighted candles and burning joss sticks. Just around the corner I was about to enter a news shop and nearly collided with an impressive figure in a gorgeous robe. This mandarin stepped aside with a courteous bow and moved on followed by a young man in white carrying a bundle of papers.

"That was His Excellency Wellington Koo" the shopkeeper said. I had often read dispatches reporting his doings but they were sent from London, Washington or New York as a rule. He was spoken of as the most scholarly and sophisticated diplomat of his day and here I had almost literally run into him in Victoria. There was certainly an oriental trend, but nothing quite explained the very special tone of the Island city at that time.

Now that I am a permanent resident I wonder if the influence may not consist in the fact that Victoria has some of the finest private gardens and all the worst public parks in Canada.

It was during one of my early sojourns that an unforgettable incident occurred. It happened on Government Street, too, because I so often was tempted by the Chinese shops then so well stocked with beautiful and inexpensive luxuries like carved ivory, jade, amber, Cloisonne, bits of gay lacquer and rich brocaded silks.

However, this episode was all British. The wind was terrific, sending hats flying, boldly blowing skirts and making my too-large hat flop over my eyes or hang on the back of my neck. It was not until I bought a blue velvet beret in a millinery shop that I made any comfortable progress.

After that I tried to hurry but was constantly obstructed by a woman pushing an ancient English pram. As if the gale were not enough to contend with she had tied a rather large dog to the rear of the vehicle. Every time I tried to pass several other people had the same idea and the course of the pram became more erratic. The dog would lunge to one side and the woman would dive after him, then they would repeat the exercise in the opposite direction.

She was always a little too far ahead and had a habit of breaking into a jog-trot, jerking the dog nervously after her. This might be followed by a sudden slowing of pace as she stopped to lift the hood of the carriage and peer inside. It seemed unkind to be impatient with someone who was evidently lovingly anxious about a baby but the poor infant was certainly being jounced about.

This woman was of middle height but seemed round-shouldered on account of propelling the carriage here and there against the wind. She had a white scarf over dark hair and a coat hanging loosely unbuttoned and flapping; although so devious in her course she was apparently always decisive and quick thinking.

In order to increase the distance between us I paused to look at a shop window and when I moved on she had stopped in front of a fruit and grocery emporium and was again inspecting the occupant of the baby carriage. As if satisfied she let down the hood again and, with a peremptory gesture designed to make the obstreperous dog lie down, she hurried into the shop.

The young animal sprang up at once and tugged at his rope in an effort to follow her but the rope held and he only succeeded in bumping into a trestle table and upsetting a large jar of yellow pampas grass. The crash brought a woman running from the shop, a stout body in a print overall apron. The dog arched excitedly at her.

"Shut up, you!" she said, angrily, before she scuttled around picking up pampas and licking the broken flower jar under the trestle. This seemed to restore her good humor for she smiled as she put a bunch of the rescued grass into my hands and said: "For tree." Then gesturing to the now subdued canine and the pram, she said: "These here belong to an artist lady, name of Emily Carr. Oh, you've heard of her? Well, I guess she's a genius alright but . . . all that gloomy stuff . . . gives me the willies, it does."

And she whisked away to return to her customers.

The street was quiet then and I heard a thin little squeal from inside the pram. Heavens! I had forgotten the infant who was probably frightened out of its little life. Lifting the hood I peeped in, making soothing noises. Something was moving or the seat and the squeals were louder, then a little hand . . . was it a hand or . . . a paw? Something emerged from a bit of white wool. That tiny paw was beating on the seat. Suddenly the something opposite me stood up—on hind legs—and began to chatter madly. Mercy on us, it was a monkey, a little brown monkey, chained to the sides of the carriage and in a rage.

The dog sprang up to investigate and, banging his silly head on the hood, let out a yelp of protest.

"Don't beat the poor dog," said a gentle English voice from the pavement. "He is only a pup."

I was momentarily paralyzed. What to do? Could I walk into that shop and say to this famous woman: "You'd better come out. It's crying"; or, more briefly: "Your pram is in trouble?" No, I just could not. I felt as if I had intruded upon a secret corner in the life of a stranger. The decent thing to do was to get away. I put the pampas at the foot of the pram, said "coo-coo" to the infuriated monkey, patted the pup and hurried off the scene.

That is how I missed a very informal meeting with a genius whose work I admired tremendously. I never did meet her but I was not alone in frustration. An American tourist told me she had tried and failed. She wanted to buy a small painting and, in a glow of pride at the prospect of being a patron of the art, she went to a door of the Carr home. Unfortunately it was Miss Emily's private door—she thought everybody knew that—probably and she did not suffer fools gladly. After some lapse of time the door was opened a few inches and an impatient "go away!" startled the visitor. The door shut and that was all. The artist lost a fan; the fan lost a good investment.

Having these memories of the artistic and the oriental side of this city it struck me as rather odd, when some years later, I unexpectedly spent a few days in London, Ont., and saw at once a notice announcing the Art Gallery was holding a joint exhibition of paintings by Miss Emily Carr of Victoria, B.C., and Mr. Chang Sui Che of China.

But an astounding contrast those pictures were as they hung on opposite walls of a large room. On one side exquisite fragility and minute perfection in form and color, feather-light flowers and enchanting butterflies. On the other the wild, passionate jungle sometimes slashed by the barbaric intensity of red, blue, green, yellow on high totem poles. One thing on the oriental wall, though, was a match for this—a splendid tiger so lifelike he might have sprung from the forest across the room.

Mr. Chang was gazing intently at the rival exhibit, when I remarked on the success of this unusual arrangement.

"She's all grandeur," he said.

An observation I noted was made by a serious looking school girl to the other young people with her. "This is a good exhibition," she said. "It shows we can stand competition."

A good comment from a young citizen of a young country.

Standing by the highway north of Victoria with a packsack on her back and her thumb in the air to passing motorists was a young brunette who at 19 years of age has travelled more than 10,000 miles and seen more of Canada than most of us will in a lifetime.

OPEN ROAD TEEN-AGER

Lee Johansen of Esquimalt—who has spent the past two years hitch-hiking and working in northern B.C., the Yukon and Northwest Territories—was on her way to another adventure in the Canadian northlands.

The figure clad in khaki trousers, white T-shirt and brown leather jacket, with a bit of food and a couple of magazines tucked into her packsack to while away time between rides, would be up north again in less than a day.

Norwegian-born Lee Johansen, who carries a hunting knife on her belt and knows how to do a clean job of skinning a squirrel, was last heard from working at the Circle T Cafe at Mile 408 on the Alaska Highway.

On a recent trip north she tripped on a rock in the snow and knocked herself out, and lay unconscious on the ground long enough for a minor case of frostbite to set into her legs, before she was found and driven more than 200 miles to the nearest hospital for treatment.

Last summer, the girl who was once told by a fortune teller that she would have an early, violent death, nearly drowned while trying to paddle a canoe down the chilly Mackenzie River to Inuvik near the Beaufort Sea in the Arctic.

During a recent visit home, she recounted the Mackenzie episode which began at 11 a.m., July 26, when she pushed her second-hand, 16-foot canoe into the water at Fort Providence:

"I had a sleeping bag, my .22 rifle and a big army pancho filled with some flour, salt, baking powder, a pound of butter, two bags of tea and some soda pop.

"I had never handled a canoe before and I had real trouble steering it. The river was half a mile wide and the current was moving at six miles an hour.

"The current caught hold of the green hull and kept turning the canoe sideways and end for end. After paddling for three or four hours with the canoe going in every direction, I felt very tired.

"I pulled in to shore, drank a bottle of pop and rested, then set out again," she said.

"In the afternoon, I pulled into a Slavee Indian camp and traded them some pop for a couple of dried fish, then shoved off again.

"I stopped at an island on Mills Lake for supper. I made some bannock (flour, baking powder and salt mixed with water), put it on a stick and held it over a fire. I ate the bannock, chewed on the fish and finished off with soda pop. Because it is daylight nearly 24 hours a day, I then set off paddling again.

"Later that night, I jammed the canoe into some bushes, jutting out into the river about 20 feet from shore, and tied the canoe to the branches. I crawled into my sleeping bag but the mosquitoes and flies buzzing around my head kept me awake for some time.

"I woke up about seven o'clock the next morning and started paddling again. Later, I saw a pole with a white and black flag on it, on a nearby shore. I thought somebody was lost or had crashed there, so I started paddling towards it.

"There was quite a lot of weed between me and the shore and eventually I got stuck in it. I jumped into the water, to pull the canoe to shore but the water went right over my head and I would have drowned if I hadn't had a good grip on the canoe.

"I had a lot of trouble getting back into the canoe but finally I managed, and soaking wet, paddled on in to shore, where with no shoes on I jumped out and landed in a raspberry thicket.

"I stuck my knife in my belt and picked up my rifle. I walked along and found the flag. It was just a signal marker for the boats that use the river; there was nobody there. I sure got mad.

"Soaking wet, I climbed back into the canoe and paddled on. I didn't even try to dry out my clothes. The seaweed was so impassable that I jumped overboard again and started dragging the doggone canoe through the weeds. I walked in water up to my elbows and arm pits all day, through the weeds close to shore because the water farther out was too choppy for the canoe.

"About five o'clock, the lake quietened down a bit, so I climbed back into the canoe and somehow managed to get my sleeping bag all wet. Later, I pulled in to shore and had bannock for supper, the only thing I had eaten that day. I moved my canoe out and tied it to some branches a safe distance from shore, and settled down for the night in my wet sleeping bag.

"My third day out, the weather was good and the water was quiet. Paddling was easy and I passed a number of moose which were standing near shore in the weed.

"I came upon a houseboat heading up river, flagged it down and spent 1½ hours talking to the Russell family from Fort Simpson who were on their way to Randall's Landing for a week's fishing. They gave me some coffee and sandwiches, a couple of fishhooks and some kind of fish which they had caught.

"I couldn't find any place to cook the fish because at this point the bush grew so thick and so far out into the river that there was no place to get in to shore to build a fire. So I just kept the fish behind the seat where I was paddling.

"About 11 o'clock that night I pulled in the usual way, tied up in the bushes and crawled into the wet sleeping bag. Mosquitoes were going down my neck, in my ears, up my nose—I didn't get much sleep that night.

"On the fourth day out, the mosquitoes and flies got worse. My left arm was pretty badly sunburned because it had been facing the sun most of the way. My face felt awful, it was burned red by the sun. I tried singing to myself but had to give up because my lips were cracked and too sore to move.

"My mind finally started wondering how many flies could I get rid of. I started killing them with my hand and lining them up along a small ledge on the side of the canoe. In about one hour I had lined up about 250 flies—250 lousy flies, they were as big as bees and they could really sting, too.

"I found raspberries growing along the shore so I started making more frequent stops to pick the berries.

"A large seow came by around noon, with about 15 Indians in it, the youngest a baby girl about 18 months old and the oldest a grandfather of about 80.

"They were going the same direction I was and had overtaken me on the river. My canoe was in bad shape by this time from leaks which had opened up when I pulled it onto a rock earlier, and the Indians agreed to tow it with them.

"Water was trickling in from a crack in the back of the canoe, two cracks in front and a couple in the middle, and the canoe was taking on about one inch of water every 12 hours. After this trouble started, I had made a small table with a couple pieces of wood and stacked everything on it to keep dry.

"I told the Indians I was paddling down to Inuvik but they said I would never make it in the condition it was in. They said it was a pretty bad canoe and too tipsy to paddle in rough water.

"That's when I had my first good meal of roast duck. The Indians had turned the scow up a tributary and tied up at a camp used by the Indians. They built a fire and dumped fish and duck into the same pot with a whole bunch of other stuff; I think they had a can of vegetable soup in there too.

"They stirred the whole thing with a big stick, and we later all used our hands to scoop the food out of the big iron kettle. You'd reach into the pot and get a piece of fish or duck—it tasted delicious, especially after eating bannock for three days.

"We shoved off again, and when we camped that night the Indians put mosquito netting on poles over my sleeping bag. My sleeping bag had nearly dried out and I spent a comfortable night there. Most of the Indians slept inside a large canvas tent, two slept in the scow and another slept on the ground under a mosquito net bar.

"We got out about seven o'clock the next morning, made one trail stop at an Indian village, stopped at the head of the Green Island rapids to pick up some drums of gasoline which the Indians had left there for their outboard motor, refueled and headed out into the swift water as a storm was blowing.

"About five o'clock we passed the junction of the Liard and Mackenzie Rivers and pulled into the island settlement of Fort Simpson. I felt good that I had come this far but I knew I couldn't risk taking the canoe any farther without endangering my life," she said.

Lee stayed in Fort Simpson for five days, sleeping nights in the RCMP guardhouse. Then she sold her rifle, canoe and fishing rod for passage on a barge back to Fort Providence.

From Fort Providence, she hitch-hiked back to Victoria, soon became bored with city life, outfitted herself anew and took off again for the far north country.

THE WOLVES WAXED FAT

By RENE HARDING

It is not only human beings who cannot take too much in the way of high living without suffering dire consequences. Animals, too, come into this category.

Long ago the north end of Vancouver Island was paralyzed by a terrific snowfall. There have been a few since, but it was the fall of 1889-90 that left such a mark in the Comox Valley and surrounding areas.

Snow began falling early in December. Six inches of soft stuff from the roofs and ground, making a firm foundation for the almost constant descent of soft flakes. It settled to a depth of five feet on the level.

The scattered population was so busy shoveling off roofs, barns and sheds that they had no time to break roads. Many barns and outbuildings went down under the weight of snow.

It was with great difficulty that a single sleigh track was kept open between the valley and the wharf, the wharf at Comox being the only means of entry or exit for the area at that time.

Firewood piled in the forest to be moved in sleighs came winter could not be got at. People had to dig out their nearest fence rails to keep fires going.

Fodder for the cows posed a problem. There were plenty of turnips pitted in the fields but it was impossible to get at them.

The new year came and skies cleared. The wind veered north and the damp heavy snow froze to a depth of six inches.

People were able to move at last. Teams with sleighs travelled up and down the valley, across fields and over buried fences.

The school was reopened. The teacher, Miss M. Mackay, objected to the condition of the building, saying she felt smothered in a cave, for nothing had been done to clear the snow away. There were no funds available. The school allowance for incidental expenses, then limited to $144 a year, had been spent for firewood and well-cleaning.

The trustees, Samuel Piercy and Eric Duncan, were obliged to tackle the job themselves. The school was unusually high and sheltered from the south wind by tall trees. Snow had settled evenly all over it. The building looked like a gigantic snowy haystack.

Samuel and Eric climbed up cautiously, and, one on each side of the roof, broke through the crust and dug steadily for a good half day till they cleared it.

Not a hundred yards north of the school they looked over unbroken snow under which lay the wreckage of what had been the first agricultural hall in the district. The building, not 10 years old, had been completely flattened by the weight of snow.

The Presbyterian church atop of Mission Hill had to be lightened of its load. It had been so strained that it was necessary to put in long iron rods that now hold the building together. The steep-roofed Anglican church escaped damage.

That snowfall, accompanied by nightly frosts, held up plowing until the last week in April.

Those settlers farther inland experienced much hardship. No snow clearing machines came to the rescue in those days. The late Percy Smith gave a graphic description of what happened.

The Horace Smith family were then farming near Black Creek. The snow lay much deeper in this area—approximately eight feet blanketed the land. Livestock and wildlife suffered—with the exception of the wolves of which there were plenty in those days.

Deer would stamp out depressions in the snow thus creating a prison out of which they could not flee while wolves, roaming the hard crusted surface, plucked the wretched creatures off at will, gorging themselves.

Literally thousands of deer were boxed in along the beaches by a sheer wall of snow. They perished with hunger and cold for the most part.

Indians patrolled the shores, at first shooting them. They salvaged the hides of even the dead ones, and finally took to using clubs on the weakened creatures, putting an end to their misery.

The Indians brought hides around to Comox by the canoe load and sold them by the pound to J. B. Holmes and Joe McPherson. They in turn shipped them down to a tannery in Victoria where they were made into excellent chamois.

The government became alarmed at such a deluge of hides coming in from outside points that winter, so passed a law forbidding the sale of deer hides.

The following year saw practically the end of wolves on the Island for a disease attacked them. They became mangy and smelled very bad before the sickness finally put an end to them.

Percy Smith was sure the sickness was brought on by too much gorging and easy living during the preceding winter.

Wolves never made a real come-back. There are a few but they keep well away from settled areas. Quite a difference from before the big snow. Then it was not uncommon for the settlers' dogs to be lured away to fall victims of these crafty animals.

Barnacles for Breakfast

seeming relish and then trotted off in search of his lord and master.

In a few minutes the skipper came back and we sat down to dinner. I had made a cream sauce and generally fixed the barnacles up and we ate them. They were surprisingly good and we each had a second helping. We were sitting on deck enjoying the sunset and an after-dinner cigarette when suddenly Abernethy appeared, crawling on his tummy and whining pitifully. He gave a weak woof and passed beyond this world of canine cares.

The skipper looked at me and I looked at the skipper, then in one breath, "Barnacles!"

Pandemonium was let loose. Various yachtsmen appeared. "Here, drink this," said one, handing me a glass of mustard and water.

"Get a stomach pump," yelled another. "Run for the doctor."

Luckily Pender Harbor boasted a doctor and a well-equipped hospital so off the skipper ran to find medical aid. In the meantime I was dosed with everything imaginable from salt and water to brandy and milk; I was thoroughly and emphatically sick.

After half an hour's impatient waiting the skipper wandered down the dock looking slightly the worse for wear.

"Where's the doctor?" I asked.

"He's out on a call but will be down the moment he gets back. His nurse went to work on me with a stomach pump and a wet dishtag is a jitterbug compared to me."

We waited. Then slowly there appeared a very inebriated figure weaving dejectedly down the ramp.

"Doctor?" we queried together.

"Now, I ain't no doctor. I jist came down to tell ya I'm awful sorry I ran over your dog a while back . . . awful sorry."

The skipper and I replied not a word. But we finished the barnacles for breakfast next morning and to date, thank you, there have been no ill effects.

In winter when North winds do blow we lean on suet pudding and rich desserts, but when "the corn is as high as an elephant's eye," the dessert story is different.

Cool, lazy desserts are now the thing.

The laziest and the prettiest dessert I know is . . . fine, cold wedges of that champ of summertime, the watermelon. No matter how you slice it, watermelon is the champion of summer desserts. Served icy cold, its pink sweetness is just right for a hot day. If all the artists in the world had collaborated on design and color they could not have come up with a more beautiful-to-look-at fruit. I like to serve wedges on a large turquoise pottery plate . . . it never fails to be a conversation piece.

Dismissing from desserts for a moment . . . have you ever tried watermelon for a color accent with cottage cheese salad? Arrange plates with a frill of watercress (or lettuce), place a mound of cottage cheese in the middle. Now arrange pale green slices of avocado around the cottage cheese and top with balls or cubes of lovely pink watermelon. It is a picture worthy of Picasso and the flavor is particularly pleasing for a firecracker-hot day.

Now back to desserts. How about enjoying the cool refreshment of a colorful fruit compote of cantaloupe, grapefruit sections and watermelon balls garnished with a sprig of fresh mint?

CANTALOUPE COMPOTE . . . Three cantaloupes, 3 cups grapefruit sections, 2 cups watermelon balls and mint. Cut cantaloupes in half and remove the seeds. Scoop out some of the cantaloupe with a ball cutter (or with a coffee spoon). Combine grapefruit sections and watermelon balls and spoon into cantaloupe shells. Garnish with a sprig of mint. Use the cantaloupe balls combined with any other fresh fruit for tomorrow's breakfast fruit.

The summer variety of fruit is endless. Cheese and crackers are the perfect escort.

The next simplest hot weather dessert is ice cream and I guess it is about the least expensive.

Once upon a time ice cream was considered a luxury and a treat. Now it can be on everyone's table. Nutritionists have long since heralded it as a real food, containing the same fine essentials as the milk or cream from which it is made. (There is low calorie ice milk for the dieter.)

One could write a book on the different ways to serve ice cream. With a large carton always on hand in the freezing compartment of your refrigerator, you have a fine media for your creative ability. If you care about serving food that looks attractive make use of your tall parfait or sherbet glasses to make up ice cream desserts. (Inexpensive glasses are a good investment for summer desserts if you have none.) Ice cream plus a few jars of toppings, decoratives, chocolate bits, nuts and fresh fruit and you have the makings of dozens of elegant but easy-to-put-together desserts.

Vanilla ice cream layered in tall glasses with fruit salad, or crushed, sweetened berries is colorful and delicious. Fill glasses with vanilla ice cream and poke holes down through it with the handle of a wooden spoon. Fill the holes with fruit syrup or chocolate syrup and top with a fluff of whipped cream. Layer chocolate ice cream with mint flavored whipped cream, tinted green. Or use three different flavored ice creams with chocolate sauce in between, top with more sauce and sprinkle with chopped nuts. All easy and pretty as a picture.

For the tricycle set or for adults watching weight . . . low calorie fruit sauce snow makes a refreshing, chifton textured dessert.

FRUIT JUICE SNOW . . . One envelope unflavored gelatine, ¼ cup sugar, dash of salt, 1½ cups boiling water, one 6-oz. can frozen fruit concentrate and 2 unbeaten egg whites. Mix the gelatine, sugar and salt. Over this pour the boiling water, stirring until well dissolved. Add the fruit concentrate of your choice and stir until melted. Chill the mixture until it begins to jelly, add unbeaten egg whites and with an electric or rotary beater, beat until it begins to hold its shape. Turn into individual molds and chill. Makes 8 servings.

There is a wide choice of frozen juices to choose from . . . orange, lemon, grape, apricot, tangerine and lime to name a few. The colors are lovely and for garnish use mint leaves.

This next recipe is called Lime Iceberg. It isn't an ice cream or even a sherbet but it is a refreshing meal starter or finisher.

LIME ICEBERG . . . Two 7-oz. bottle lemon-lime carbonated beverage, 2 Tbsp.

On a cool morning when ambition is high how about making a Chocolate Slice? This slice is a little like a Nanaimo Bar but the ingredients are slightly different.

CHOCOLATE SLICE . . . Two cups of Kellogg's Corn Flake Crumbs (or 8 cups corn flakes crushed), $\frac{1}{2}$ cup soft butter or margarine, $\frac{1}{4}$ cup sugar, 1 egg slightly beaten, 1 tsp. vanilla, 1 cup shredded coconut and $\frac{1}{2}$ cup chopped nuts. Second layer: $\frac{1}{2}$ cup soft butter or margarine, 2 cups sifted confectioners' sugar, 1 tsp. vanilla and about 2 Tbsp. milk. Top glass: 2 squares unsweetened chocolate or 2 envelopes red-melted chocolate and 1 Tbsp. melted butter. Blend over very low heat.

If using corn flakes, crush to fine crumbs (the ready crushed corn flakes are very handy). Combine the butter, sugar, cocoa, egg and vanilla in top of a double boiler. Cook over hot water, stirring constantly until the mixture is well blended and slightly thickened. Remove from heat. Add coconut, nutmeats and corn flake crumbs. Mix well. Press into a greased 8x8-inch pan. Chill.

Beat the butter for the filling until it is fluffy, add confectioners' sugar gradually. Stir in vanilla and just enough milk so that mixture will spread easily. Spread over cocoa layer. Chill with Chocolate Glaze, let stand until firm. Cut into squares to serve.

Chocolate Slices are a lovely summer eye-pleaser and so good to eat. Easy to make (no oven baking) and even easier to eat. Make them often.

Piping hot baking powder biscuits that are light and tender are a fine status symbol for the bride. Here is a never-fail, quick-as-a-wink recipe.

QUICK-QUICK HOT BISCUITS . . . 2 cups (sifted before measuring) all-purpose flour, 2 tsp. baking powder, $\frac{1}{4}$ tsp. salt, $\frac{1}{4}$ cup salad oil and $\frac{3}{4}$ cup cold milk. Sift together the flour, salt and baking powder. Pour $\frac{1}{4}$ cup salad oil into a measuring cup. Fill to the 1-cup mark with the milk. Pour all at once into the flour mixture. Stir with a fork until dry ingredients and liquid are incorporated. This is a soft dough. Turn onto a floured board and pat out into a rectangle. Cut in squares and place on lightly greased baking sheet. Bake about 15 minutes in a 400-degree F. oven.

For all wet-grass divot
diggers and sand-trap visitors, etc. (and aren't we all at times?) try nylon net!

I keep a square of nylon net attached to my golf cart.
It gets into those grooves in the clubs that an ordinary towel doesn't reach.

Grease, mud and sand won't cling to the net. It is useable time after time, whereas an ordinary towel needs washing after each round.

The net doesn't scratch or mar the face of the clubs, either!

EASY ON THE VACUUM

DEAR HELOISE:

I pin a paper bag on my apron before starting to vacuum the rugs.

Then when I find any object that might injure the vacuum, such as screws, pins, etc., I put it in the bag for easy dis-

DEAR HELOISE:

A reader mentioned keeping her earrings in an icecube tray.

Unless the tray is a plastic one, I'd suggest using the bottom of an egg carton.

The cardboard is less likely to scratch your jewelry, and a little spray paint will make it a lovely receptacle for earrings and small jewelry.

Naturally, I mean the type of egg carton which does not have removable partitions.

I am only 10 years old,

Preparing Young Canadians For a New Age

CHARLES HAYNES

Visitors to the Gordon Head Campus of the University of Victoria this summer will see a vital phase in the evolution of a small college into an important and modern Canadian university.

Amid the racket of carpenters' hammers and the buzz of electric saws, from the dust will arise the social sciences and the education-arts buildings—barely in time to meet the predicted fall influx of students.

During the past years of history the University of Victoria has grown to meet the challenge issued by the necessity of education.

Victoria College's 62 years may be considered in three distinct stages. The first stage, from 1903 to 1925, saw the College in affiliation with Montreal's McGill University and a part of Victoria High School.

Craigdarroch Castle provided the College a home during the second stage, 1921 and 1946.

After the Second World War Victoria College moved in with the Provincial Normal School at Lansdowne. This third era of development ended in July, 1953, when Victoria College became the University of Victoria and dropped its association with the University of British Columbia.

An act of the Provincial Legislature in 1894 permitted the province's high schools to affiliate with Canadian universities.

Victoria High School applied to McGill University in 1902, and by doing so laid claim to the sum of $10,000 from the will of city businessman Benjamin William Pearce, who had left that amount for an institute of higher learning in Victoria. The building which housed Victoria High School and Victoria College, where Central Junior Secondary now stands, was built at a cost of $40,000. E. B. Paul, principal from 1903 to 1908, described it as "exceedingly pretty" and noted that "when the ivy had grown over the walls and the glaring red of the bricks had been in a measure toned down, even those who now objected to its style would admit it highly artistic."

Victoria College's first class of seven students studied the first year courses of McGill; second year courses were added in 1907 for the convenience of two students. Victoria High became so crowded the same year, even the principal's office being used for classroom space, that a separate three-room frame building had to be erected for the sole use of college students. S. J. Willis was principal from 1908 to 1925. During the entire early period Victoria College came under the administration of the Greater Victoria School Board.

The problem of overcrowding remained, though, and in 1914 the present Victoria High was built. Meanwhile an act of 1906 established the University of British Columbia. Victorians were disappointed that the university was not to be in their city. When UBC opened in 1915, Victoria College closed.

The College reopened in 1920 under E. B. Paul, and held classes on the third floor of Victoria High. This arrangement proved unsuitable. The year 1921 found the school trustees renting the mansion built in 1890 by the famous Dunsmuir family—Craigdarroch Castle.

Life was quiet at the College in the years between the two wars. Victoria was a beautiful spot separated from the world. A valedictory address in an annual of the time:

"We leave with the memories of two happy years which we will cherish in later life. The College with its towers and chimneys silhouetted against the sky, is an image that we will carry with us always."

In the early thirties, Victoria College's 10 faculty members (three of them women) were engaged in introducing 200 students to the benefits of an arts and sciences education. English, classics, sciences, philosophy, French, economics, history and math were on the curriculum. Percy H. Elliott, who succeeded Dr. Paul as principal in 1927, was a man of far-ranging interests. The last book he read before his death in 1943 was on Japanese mysticism. He took classes in science, while Principal Emeritus Paul lectured on Roman history. Two generations of students studied chemistry under E. J. Savannah. The registrar was W. H. Gage, now of JBC.

The Student Christian Movement, Players' Club, and Science Club, among other clubs, offered students a choice of free-time activity. Victoria College ruggers retained the provincial championship in 1931. Books from the Carnegie Institute were discussion material for the International Relations Club. Disarmament caught the attention of a few. The Men's Discussion Club tackled the pros and cons of the motion "Resolved that the completion of the Russian Five-Year Plan will be in the interests of humanity." One speaker at the College commented upon "the lack of action among Canadian students"; another warned of the "horror and futility of war."

A few of the individuals who have participated in the College's development over many years are Robert Wallace, Sydney Pettit, Harry Hickman, Roger Bishop, Dorothy Cruikshank, Phoebe Noble, Gordon Fields and Lewis Clark.

The Second World War brought an atmosphere of uncertainty into the lives of college students. Victoria College annuals issued during the war years listed former students killed in action, missing, or prisoners of war.

The end of the war and the subsequent flood of eager students, many of them veterans, doomed the suitability of Craigdarroch Castle for safe and comfortable education. The College's enrollment swelled to 600, far above the regulation limit. The Colonist quoted a teacher:

"At least 50 students would lose their lives in the event of fire . . . The staff members would undoubtedly stay to try and get the young people out and we'd all perish—God help us!"

Student feeling was acute regarding the inadequate housing of the College. The Students' Council, prompt and effective in those days, noted that the Provincial Normal School could easily accommodate the enrollment of Victoria College. Craigdarroch, the 1946 annual, described the situation:

"Conditions in the Castle were a trifle cramped, especially in classrooms where students had to take turns in breathing. The only ventilation was through the floor-length windows which sent an icy blast roaring around one's ankles . . . The fire chief said that the student body might easily have been burned to a crisp. That was a good point."

Then, inspired by Terry Garner and the council, 600 students took action, marched through town to Premier Hart's doorstep and presented their final plan. It worked! In November the College packed up its books and walked to the Nanaimo School.

The citizens of Victoria evidently sympathized with the plight of the students for a petition of 14,247 signatures was presented to the premier.

Creation of the Provincial Normal School paralleled the struggle for the creation of Victoria College. The Young Building, a considerable structure a half century ago, was opened in 1915. It's Nanaimo red brick, slate roofing material from Wales, and distinctive tower, made the building a familiar landmark in Victoria. During the Second World War it served as a hospital. In 1956 the Normal School became part of the College.

Students quickly settled into the new surroundings at Lansdowne where Dr. J. M. Ewing occupied the principal's office until 1952. Student activities were intense and varied. In the debating society, Alan Macfarlane defended the affirmative: "Resolved that B.C. liquor laws be liberalized to equal those of England." Duke Ellington, Woody Herman, the King Cole Trio, Benny Goodman and Count Basie were heroes of the Hot Records Society. Ski trips and dances were popular events; College alumni remember with nostalgia annual dances held in the Crystal Garden. Many considered the Martlet, a crude leaflet which rumor has it was once edited by Pierre Berton, less than satisfactory.

"The staff once again wishes to remind the students that the pear thrown through the Martlet office window was not aimed with the intention of silencing the press but in the same appreciative spirit which caused the London mob to shower an eighteenth century writer with rose petals."

A prof's wish for "a moral college paper" seemed hopeless.

Students, as ever, found themselves in conflict with the powers that be:

"Dan Levy led a spirited drive against the B.C. Electric in our much-publicized bus fare investigation. However, publicity was all we got out of the investigation, for in spite of Dan's efforts the fares were not reduced one farthing."

About half of Victoria College's 300 students participated in the annual UBC invasion march, when the College basketball, curling, and rugby teams competed with those of the bigger brother. Night boats to Vancouver were alive with dancing and parties. The 1954 Tower reports, "there were comparatively few scandals this year."

Victoria College in the 1950s experienced serious growing pains. Principal Harry Hickman guided the College in these difficult years of change. Soaring enrollments necessitated the construction of the Ewing Building to provide greater office, laboratory and library space. Students dubbed it the "pink and blue elephant." On the completion of the handsome Paul Building in 1961 the Lansdowne Campus assumed its present aspect. Perhaps the most popular building with students, however, was the "Cal" where discussion raged over Mrs. Norris' legendary coffee.

The theft of a plywood teapot, a cannon, the Queen's bust, a $800 silver ingot, the 1962 Centennial sign from the City Hall, and a totem pole heralded the last wild fling of college notoriety before the sobering effects of university status. Victoria became less and less amused. Campus publications also reflected a certain dubiousness of existence. The Martlet lingered, but magazines like the Spectator, Listener, Stylus, and Centurion enjoyed moments of glory and faded away.

Victoria College graduated from solely a two-year college in 1959 with the addition of third-year courses. Two years later the College granted its first bachelor's degrees. They were, however, UBC degrees. At the degree-granting ceremony UBC Chancellor A. E. Grauer referred to Victoria College's tremendous growth as a "threat and a challenge." The College met one challenge when it was decided to abandon the cramped Lansdowne Campus and expand on 285 acres of land near Gordon Head, acquired through the co-operation of the department of national defence and the Hudson's Bay Company. The American campus planner W. W. Wurster advised a radical design for a new campus that he predicted would accommodate 10,000 students. Phase I of Gordon Head development saw the construction of the Clearihue Building, the Student Union Building, the Elliott Science Building, the McPherson Library, and residences.

Victoria College finally graduated from UBC on the first of July, 1963, and became the University of Victoria. Judge Clearihue was appointed chancellor. At the ceremony he told the audience:

"It must be remembered that the University of Victoria is not part of the government of B.C. . . .

"It is an independent university . . . belonging to and supported by the people of B.C. and in part by you the citizens of Victoria."

Judge Clearihue's presence was particularly appropriate, for he was a member of Victoria College's first class in 1903. Certainly his was the pride and wonder that only he and few others could understand.

The new university with its first president, Dr. Malcolm G. Taylor, is endeavoring to prepare young Canadians for the new age.

He Praised Queen Victoria And This City Loved It

By JAMES K. NESBITT

The first really important official from the United States came calling in Victoria a century ago at this mid-summer time of year.

He was Schuyler Colfax, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and Victoria put on a great show for him, wining and dining him, and making speeches that went on far into the night.

I compiled a list of top U.S. figures who have come to Victoria:

1865—Schuyler Colfax.
1869—William Henry Seward, who, as secretary of state, purchased Alaska for $7,000,000.
1893—Adlai Stevenson, grandfather of the late Adlai, and then vice-president of the United States under President Grover Cleveland.
1935—John Nance Garner, vice-president of the United States, under President Franklin Delano Roosevelt.
1937—President Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

The Victoria Daily Chronicle reported the welcome for Schuyler Colfax: "... as the steamer Eliza Anderson, gallily decked with bunting, made her appearance, flags were hoisted in the city and several hundred citizens repaired to Brodick's Wharf—the American consul, Mr. Allen Francis, and Messrs. J. A. McCrea, P. M. Backus, A. H. Guild, Frank Tarbell and C. C. Pendergast met the party, and escorted them to carriages and they were drawn by spanking greys and whites to the St. Nicholas Hotel."

In the Colfax party were Governor Evans of Washington Territory, and also from Washington Hon. A. A. Denney, son of S. Garfield and Judge Hewitt; also Lieutenant-Governor Brown of Illinois, Samuel Bowles of The Springfield Republican, and A. D. Richardson, special correspondent of The New York Tribune.

The Chronicle told something of Mr. Colfax: "... has been distinguished in the Congress for his earnest advocacy of the Overland Telegraph and Pacific Railroad bills, and for his unflinching loyalty as a warm friend of the late martyred President Lincoln, and so his visit here is the more appreciated by our citizens of every nationality who had learned to love and esteem that noble man."

"Mr. Bowles is an able representative of New England men and New England views, and Governor Brown represents the empire state of the west, and is the proprietor of the largest newspaper establishment outside of New York. Mr. Colfax and Gov. Brown are both printers."

No sooner had Mr. Colfax and friends refreshed themselves at the St. Nicholas than American Consul Francis took them out to see the sights and make official calls. They drove up to Cary Castle to pay their respects to Governor Arthur Edward Kennedy, across to James Bay to call on retired and recently knighted Sir James Douglas, and out to Esquimalt, where they went aboard the flagship Suttie, to be received by Admiral Denman.

Back at the St. Nicholas "a large number of citizens and merchants paid their respects to Mr. Colfax."

Mayor Thomas Harris and his councillors made a formal call, bearing an illuminated address: "We congratulate the government of which you are a member on the restoration of peace between the federal states and trust that the friendly feeling which exists between our own Imperial government and your great Republic may not only continue undisturbed, but that every year, as the policy of the two nations becomes better understood and appreciated they will become more firmly allied, not only by the powerful interests of commerce, but also by the reflection that we are of one language, one origin, and that both are the standard bearers of liberty and civilization, and if rivalry exists between us, let us trust that it will always be that of the arts of peace and progress for the advancement of the human race."

This was read by acting town clerk William Leigh, and signed by Mayor Harris and Councillors James Fell, William B. Smith, Joseph Jeffrey, James Thorne and Joseph W. Carey.

(I would think this address is still somewhere in Washington, preserved as an historic document, for Colfax went on from Speaker to be 1869-73 vice-president under President U. S. Grant.)

Mayor Harris, a convivial soul, portly and flushed of face, dearly loved important visitors and protocol and he made a speech saying "It was the first opportunity he and the city council had had of presenting an address to one of their American cousins, and it was the pleasantest duty he had ever performed in his life."

The Chronicle told Victorians that Mr. Colfax "replied ably and fluently—he said that when he and his party travelled over an entire continent and came at last to the soil of another land, and to be received so kindly, it filled his heart with gratitude, which words could not express. He said the party made up their minds the trip across the continent could not be complete without setting foot in Her Majesty's dominions. They had great regard for the Queen. She was a good friend to their country in its hour of trial. He was for peace and would consent to no war but for the salvation and honor of the republic to which he belonged."

That evening Consul Francis gave an elaborate and sumptuous dinner at the French Hotel, and Governor Kennedy himself was there, and Mayor Harris and old Sir James, and 150 other gentlemen; the ladies stayed at home. Ladies did not go to public dinners in those days. The Victoria volunteer band was there under the leadership of Mr. Haynes "and discoursed excellent music at intervals." There were toasts and speeches, and the party didn't break up until 2 a.m. and at 3 the band and several citizens serenaded Mr. Colfax, and he came out on his balcony in the dawn and said a few more words, and then he must have collapsed into his bed, having had such a day and night.

Everywhere he went here wise Mr. Colfax praised Queen Victoria. This, naturally, made a great hit in the city named for Her Majesty, and where everyone was in love with the Queen.

At the banquet Mr Colfax "whose voice was somewhat hoarse," said:

VICTORIA'S FIRST U.S. VISITOR MADE BIG HIT

"You have honored us with a welcome which would fill any heart with emotion, and what gratifies me more, I meet not only American citizens here, but I find gentlemen in high office under that good woman (loud cheers) whom we all love to honor, as though we were all countrymen and brothers."

Mr. Colfax politely and obliquely warned those who were saying that one day the United States would return to the British flock, under the monarch: "Nothing gave me more pleasure than to receive your invitation to come here, for we had determined to visit British soil. I am a Republican, as you all know, in every fibre of my being, but I never think of the noble woman who rules over you (loud cheers) but my heart warms with gratitude. Whether we consider your Queen as wife, mother or ruler, we regard her with both love and gratitude."

U.S. CONSUL ALLEN FRANCIS
... he gave a bang-up dinner, after which the guest of honor was serenaded at three in the morning.

Well, after an outpouring like that Mr. Colfax could have done no wrong in Victoria. The Colonist, editorially, purred and cooed: "While the opinions expressed from so many British lips may show, in their small way, the good feeling which is entertained in this part of the world for the great republic, the remarks of our eminent visitor, so full of kindness, so pregnant of the peace between the two great Anglo-Saxon nations will carry a weight we cannot well overrate."

"In Mr. Colfax we recognize that representative man who is to become more and more the ruling element in America, whose mission is not to launch fulminations against England or monarchies in general, but rather, by force of example, to lead less fortunate powers up to that pinnacle of liberty and constitutional government which the honorable gentleman so ably and so earnestly decanted upon while here."

Returning this compliment, Mr. Colfax went calling on the editor of

The Colonist: "Professional courtesies—the Hon. Schuyler Colfax, who until recently was a newspaper proprietor himself—favored us with a friendly visit. We felt a sincere regret at parting from this gentleman, whose affable and social intercourse with our citizens will cause his brief stay in Her Majesty's possessions to be ever cherished with the most agreeable recollections."

"Before taking his departure from our editorial sanctum, Mr. Colfax conferred the additional favor upon us of sitting for his portrait to Mr. Spencer, photographic artist of the Theatre Gallery."

Mr. Colfax was a leading Odd Fellow, and so from The Oddfellows Hall on Douglas Street: "... in attendance were several ladies, who were desirous of receiving the degree of Rebekah, of which Mr. Colfax was the originator. In the course of his remarks to the ladies, Mr. Colfax alluded affectionately to the loss of his wife several years hence, and stated that it was during her illness that he first conceived the idea of instituting the Rebekah degree, through which females are enabled to become members of the order."

And now for the departure from Victoria: "... numerous friends proceeded with him in carriages to Esquimalt—on the wharf a large number of ladies and gentlemen assembled. Three times three hearty British and American cheers were given as the party went aboard the Sierra Nevada for San Francisco, and Mr. Colfax responded briefly from the paddle-box, to the effect that he and his friends had not been so well treated anywhere as here."

Then the departing vessel cast off her lines "and proceeded across the bows of the telegraph vessels, Geo. S. Wright and Milton Badger—the former firing a gun and the latter dipping her colors."

HMS Suttie, was anchored out in Esquimalt Harbor, and her "excellent band was mustered on the quarterdeck and played 'Hail Columbia' as the Sierra Nevada passed and three times three cheers were given from those on the graceful passenger ship."

The Sierra Nevada fired her departure gun, "and steamed slowly out of the harbor, the landbound assemblage watching her progress with interest and regret—in an hour she had disappeared around Race Rocks, and our agreeable visitors had vanished (probably forever) from our view. May their voyage homeward be attended with pleasant incidents, and may the greetings from their friends in the east be as sincere as the welcome which was extended them by their British cousins in Victoria."

Well, Mr. Colfax did not vanish forever from Victoria. He had such pleasant memories of this place that he came back for a visit in 1883. He had married a second time, and he brought his wife and son.

Two years later the former U.S. Speaker and vice-president died in Washington.

NOT EVEN THE OWNER WANTED TO RAZE BARN

VIVIANNE CHADWICK

A few short hours ago, as this is written, a fine old building, put up with the same care and thought and craftsmanship given to the construction of a battleship, was razed to the ground.

True, it was only a barn. But it was a very special barn. The envy of every farmer within miles for nearly three-quarters of a century. Now it's gone.

Nobody is happy about that.

The barn stood at the corner of McTavish and West Saanich, well back from both roads, overlooking the broad and sunny acres that had been, perhaps 150 years ago, a grant made to the first McTavish, who was a Hudson's Bay Factor.

It stood nearly 50 feet high, was 50 feet wide and 150 feet long. The great timbers upon which it rested were 50 feet in length and 14 inches square. The uprights were many times the size and strength of what is used today. Part of the foundations, where the land slopes away, were of stone, and underneath many horses could be—and were—stabled in fine dry quarters.

It was a beautiful and unique piece of the past. Every resident of that vicinity to which the writer talked regrets its passing . . . not without bitterness. And some anger.

Duncan McTavish, son of the George A. McTavish who had been the property's first owner, told of his earliest memories there. The farm, 630 acres of it, ran clear down to the edge of the bay, and the older McTavish, who married in 1877, brought the furniture and much of the materials used in the first farm-house, now gone, from the Old Country, around the Horn. Many of the fruit trees he planted are still bearing. Duncan himself was born in that farmhouse, in 1883, and though he doesn't remember a time when the huge barn wasn't there, he isn't sure of the date of its building.

Others, however, can fill in some of the gaps. Bill Munro, who lives at Aldous Terrace in North Saanich and who says he is 76 this year, recalls a great deal of the district's entire history. He was a very small boy indeed when he helped his father haul those mighty timbers from the Sidney mill.

"The roads were narrow, rough, and twisting," he says. "Nearly five miles of them, and we had two teams of horses. The job was a tricky one. It took a long time and a sight of handling!"

By that time, he says, the 630 acres of the original grant had begun to be cut up. For some years the portion upon which the barn was presently to stand, was owned by a man named Breed, who raised vast quantities of fine hops for beer. The third owner was A. C. Flumerfelt, and he it was, advises Mr. Munro, who put up the great barn.

In a neat green house on the waterfront side of West Saanich Road, nearby, lives a retired gentleman named Milton Towers. He was born in New Brunswick, but came into the picture here when he went to work for the Allen Steamship Company, which became the fourth owners of the acreage surrounding the barn.

Allen's was a Scotch firm and Mr. Towers has often wondered why its directors bought land on Vancouver Island. They paid $1,000 per acre, he says, which was a truly fancy price in those days. The year was 1912.

"Did they," suggests Mr. Towers, "foresee the coming war, and decide to invest a long way from it?"

In any event, the Allen interests not only purchased the land, but, he recalls, apparently not trusting the local surveyors' efforts, sent out their own crew from Scotland—and forked out a great sum for that survey.

Mr. Towers himself has lived on his present corner of the old farm for some 34 years. He ran sheep, several hundred of them, for the Allen Company, and so the barn was used then for the sheep, for horses, and for fodder.

"A disaster, the demolition of that building," he said.

So, gradually, the once extensive single holding was divided and subdivided. Western Lands Co., said real estate man Harold Haynes, had floated the subdivision. In his office there had been, at one time, an interesting pamphlet put out on the subject of the property, with its history, but though he searched for me, he found none of these left.

Part of the waterfront side was once a naval base, it seems, and part was once owned by a French gentleman named Trench, who built a spacious mansion there, only to have it ultimately destroyed by fire. It was rumored that he didn't get along too well with the Indians on the nearby reservation, though this may have had nothing whatever to do with anything . . . In any event, only the remnants of the stone gateposts remain today.

Officialdom Spells Doom Of Landmark

Across West Saanich Road again, which road when built exactly bisected the McTavish estate, in a heavenly garden setting surrounded by beautiful trees, lives Miss E. V. Gwynne, another resident who deplores the loss of the old landmark.

"I can look back 45 years here," said she, "and remember that the barn was old then, but as solid as the day it was put up. It still is," she added, although its last ramparts had crashed an hour earlier.

No one has been sorrier to see it come down than its current owner. Percy Criddle, whose home is close by on McTavish Road, had great plans for that fine old barn. He has spent the last five years developing the surrounding acreage into a golf course. This, too, was especially designed with the barn as its centre, because it had been his intention to remodel the building into a country clubhouse which would have been truly unique.

He called in a Victoria architect, went over the structure with him foot by foot, explained what he wanted done and was assured it could be managed. He had his blueprints finished, and was all set to go. And ran into Trouble.

"Oh no," he was told. "That's not according to regulations . . . the mortar in the stonework won't do at all . . . those beams and bats will have to come off . . . this kind of thing isn't allowed today . . . the footings must be there and so—and they aren't!"

"Footings! You mean footings!" commented one irate resident, when the news got around.

"Not safe!" snorted another scornfully, "That barn? It would support a herd of elephants!"

So Percy Criddle's plans were condemned. And with them the barn. Because he found that if he must conform to all the modern requirements, the final cost would be just twice what it would be if he put up an entire new clubhouse. He couldn't afford it.

"I was heart broken," he said.

So were all the neighbors. They saw no sense to it. They came sadly remonstrating, hating to lose an old friend, and he said to them: "Oh, don't come crying to me! I can't help it! I need a shoulder to weep on myself!"

So he sold the great barn, as was, to Ian Fraser. "Pull it down, then," he ordered. "Because that has to be the site for the clubhouse."

Mr. Fraser, a big, friendly man who, in a stocking cap, looks like a benevolent pirate as he sits his big, destructive bulldozer, thought that if the building had to go, at least it shouldn't do so unmourned or with its story untold. He telephoned The Islander, and then very considerably held off his work and his minions until the last picture could be taken . . .

I went out to talk to everybody round about, on a beautiful summer morning. All that was left of the mighty barn was the floor, two of the four walls, and the lofty roof. Mr. Fraser walked across the heavy plank floor with me and pointed out the great uprights and told me of the timbers underneath. The wood looked like new. I could see that this was one job of wrecking of which he didn't approve.

"It's a shame, you know," said he.

I went away and talked to one more interested party further along the road—Rod Perks, who has been working on the greens and the tees of the course with Percy Criddle, and who will be the pro when the Glenn Meadows Golf and Country Club is ready.

"The new club will be up in a couple of months or so," he said. "L-shaped. Very fine. But . . ."

But. Yes, indeed. A big "but."

I looked back as I left. Where walls and roof had stood some 20 minutes earlier, there was nothing. Nothing but a memory.

McTAVISH ROAD BARN . . . going . . . going . . . gone.—W. A. Boucher.

When Tony Bristowe advises that steelhead will be found mostly in the easy-lying places . . . where a pool spreads and slows down below a rapid; in the slacker sides of fast runs; behind boulders and other natural breaks in the current; in gentle draws and below shelves or steps on the bottom . . . he is talking from experience.

He seems to think like a fish. That is why we read his book—Fresh Water Fishing, Your Questions Answered—with keen interest. Tony is manager of a trust firm in Victoria and fishes every chance he gets. Although his book covers all North American fishing and makes no reference to regional places, when I read it I often felt I was with him on his favorite Cowichan River.

This book is of special interest to Vancouver Islanders because although he has fished in many parts of the world his main fishing in recent years has been in Vancouver Island rivers and lakes. Although he tries to take a broad look at fishing it is obvious the tactics he describes are the tactics that he uses to catch trout, salmon and steelhead on Vancouver Island.

He says he has refined 25 years' experience of fishing and reading about fishing, so that bare bones are left with enough meat on them to make them interesting, but not enough to give indigestion.

He observes there is "no written substitute for getting up and going fishing. However, I hope that this book is what a fisherman would like to find on his shelf when he gets home, either to check on things that happened today, or to suggest things for him to do tomorrow."

The book is in question and answer form, easy to read and understand. It is fascinating to read as an entire book and is easily categorized for a useful reference book.

It is one of several question and answer books published by the Taplinger Publishing Co. Inc., of New York.

We liked his careful distinction between game fish and sports fish, with game fish including the salmon, trout, and black bass which includes the small-mouthed, large-mouthed and spotted bass and the sport fish including white perch, yellow bass, sunfish and crappies.

He also goes into how to fish for northern pike, muskellunge, pickerel and Arctic grayling, and the magical Atlantic salmon.

In a chapter on the senses of fish Bristowe explains that fish have emotions of fear, curiosity and jealousy and observes that fish live by their sights and can see as well by night as by day.

"Fishermen must take care not to create waves, however insignificant, for they will set up an opposing pattern to the prevailing waves, warning the fish of danger immediately," he advises.

Tips like that occur on just about every page of his book.

HE THINKS LIKE A FISH

FRESH WATER FISHING, Your Questions Answered. By Anthony Bristowe. Barnes and MacEachern Limited, Don Mills, Ontario. $6.95. 276 pages.

... fishes around

"Fish can see all around and upwards. Careless approach from behind will warn a fish just as quickly as one from in front," he notes.

He also says that fish can see color, but at night movement and shape of lures are more important than color.

Smell from human skin can repel fish, but the smell from waders or rubber boots seems to have no effect on them, he advises.

Bristowe devotes a fair amount of space to fishing methods . . . fly fishing and spin fishing . . . and although he is devoted to fly fishing he delves quite deeply into spin fishing and bait fishing.

"Many fishermen are introduced to fishing through spinning and graduate to fly fishing when they acquire a taste for a method with greater refinement and breadth," he says.

He describes basic fly and spinning outfits for as little as $25 and for more than $200.

A fly fisherman could learn to cast from reading his book, but Bristowe advises that if possible he take a few lessons and then take a trip with an expert.

He deals extensively with spinning lures and flies used in spinning and delves into fly-tying and popular flies.

One of Bristowe's true loves is fishing for coho and spring (he calls them Kings) salmon in rivers. Coho and jacks will take a fly in the river, he says.

He prefers evening fishing for trout because more insects are hatching in late afternoon than earlier in the day. "Early morning is usually not worth getting up for. The middle of the day may be as good as any other time, except during very bright and hot weather," he says.

He goes into considerable detail about lake fishing telling where to find the feed and how to fish different kinds of lures in the lakes. He does the same for rivers and streams and after reading the book the reader feels he knows behind just what rock there should be a trout or a steelhead lurking.

Bristowe tells how to fish for winter and summer steelhead with flies and lures, but shows his distaste for roe.

"In states and provinces of Canada where it is permitted—and unfortunately there are too many of them still—salmon eggs are overwhelmingly popular bait. This is regrettable evidence of many anglers' cupidity, for roe is by all standards, ethical or physical, a disgusting bait to handle. It is only recommendation is its deadliness, and this is hardly a recommendation to any but the fish hog," he says.

"Long casting seldom pays in steelhead fishing, and covering closer water faithfully will produce much better results than long distance bombardment," he advises.

Although Victoria lakes, Beaver, Elk, Prospect, Langford, Glen are filled with sunfish, few people fish them for sport. But Bristowe devotes a fair amount of space to sunfish fishing.

"... I would guess that more sunfish are caught by anglers every year than most game fish added together," he says. "Their main drawback is lack of size, but this can be overcome by the use of ultra-light tackle, on which sunfish can provide a lot of good sport."

His book has pages devoted to fisherman's extras, gaffs, nets, tailers, waders, wading, fishing knots, fly patterns, fly tying, natural baits and how to use them, cut baits, insects, fishing history and literature.

We liked Bristowe's book. It will rate a prominent place on our bookshelf and we have no doubt it will be plenty thumb-worn before many months. It is the kind of book you read and then refer to again and again and again.—ALEC MERRIMAN, Colonist Outdoors Editor.

BRING THE OUTDOORS INDOORS

Artistic Ideas with Driftwood

By KAY SANDFORD

Current yearning for the wide open spaces and contact with nature is being reflected more and more these days in interior decorating. There are endless ideas for bringing the outdoors indoors. One very simple way is to decorate with driftwood; it is fun to collect and versatile to 'play' with.

Those of us who live near the sea have no excuse for not experimenting with these bleached branches to enhance our home decor. Their basic design and stark simplicity inspire many decorative treatments and carry a refreshing and perpetual reminder of the sun, wind and sea with their weathered smoothness.

Small interesting shapes can be easily arranged to hold cut flowers for centrepieces, or planters with climbing vines intertwining the branches for dramatic effects in entrance halls, on side tables or mantles.

The rather ugly voids of empty fireplaces provide perfect settings for driftwood—sculptures which are more original than the artificial greenery so often displayed.

Here is a challenge for the imagination—to find and select suitably large pieces to fill the fireplace area. Cut the base of a main branch so it will stand firm and square on the hearth, then trim the pointing fingers to form your own design. Again potted plants and leaves, dried grasses, cattails, thistles, Queen Anne's lace and other wild flowers and shrubs can be combined into graceful arrangements.

If the weather-beaten surface is a little too rustic to compete with the sophisticated finish of your furniture, it can be painted to give a smart effect which will fit in with modern furniture, or artistic touches to complement conventional period pieces. Simply cover the driftwood with a sealer to prevent the paint from soaking into the wood and when dry, apply white, off-white, pale grey or some other pastel that is of your choice. This can then be toned down with an accent color, brushed on, then partially wiped off again, to blend with your favorite color scheme—pink, blue, green, charcoal, coral, or even gold or one of the "antique" paints for varied and intriguing effects.

If your search for a piece of driftwood large enough to fill your fireplace is not successful, you can create the pattern you want by cutting smaller pieces from other collected branches and "welding" them to suit.

Saw them at an angle and nail them to the main branch, arranging the sculpture to your own design and to the size required. The nail holes and joints can be filled with Plaster of Paris, or wood filler, and smoothed in until the joints and holes merge with the original branches. Then the whole arrangement can be painted as described above.

Once you have achieved an attractive sculpture with your own hands and a little imagination, you can aspire to even greater heights by making beautiful and original lamp bases. It is almost certain that the man of the house can now be drawn into this project to do the necessary wiring and assembly! In no time at all, both of you will have discovered a rewarding and enjoyable hobby. Artistic tendencies which do not quite make the grade in talent and experience for oil painting and other art forms, can find a wealth of self-expression by working with driftwood.

Your "hobby" will not be confined to the making of your masterpieces either—half the fun is to be had from cuttings to the benches to find just the right pieces to express your ideas—they are there in abundance, discarded generously by Nature.

It would seem selfish to restrict such a delightful pastime to those who live by the sea. Similar pieces of "deadwood" can be culled from the roots of stump fences. In fact, you will probably find the facilities of the supermarket—your "merchandise" displayed in rows awaiting your choice of shape and size! (Of course, if the stump fence you find happens to form the demarcation of a farm or private property, it might be as well to ask permission of the farmer or owner before being accused of scavenging! It has been my experience that such persons are very helpful once the reasons for your intrusion are explained.)

In the case of root pieces, which incidentally form into the most interesting shapes of all with their twisted branches, gnarled joints and deeply grooved trunks, the finish will be a little different from the dried but sea-washed driftwood. This time the surface will not have had the benefit of salt water to give it bone-like qualities, but the sun, wind and rain will have weathered it sufficiently.

Clean off any soil or moss and smooth the surface with fine sandpaper, gouge a few extra grooves into the thick parts to give more intense texture—but avoid getting an artificial look. Then rub with beeswax, floor wax or even shoe polish for a mellow finish—or you can paint again, but this time with varnish, "satin" finish or thick "high-gloss" to ensure a rich smooth surface—perfect for catching the reflected highlights from room lamps or firelight!

All "connoisseurs" of driftwood collecting will tell you that part of the "game" is to "live" with each piece before finally visualizing its most appropriate use and treatment. Friends should be encouraged to give their suggestions and join in the contemplation for "how-best-to-do."

Perhaps there will be some treasured pieces collected which will never quite "come to life" and defy any form of adaptation by the most creative mind. If they have some artistic merit in their own right—keep them as natural sculptures to place here and there in your home, on the patio, or placed strategically in the garden among the shrubs and plants—they can make quite exciting "conversation" pieces.

Finally, if these specimens still resist your critical eye and there simply is no place where your driftwood can find its rightful home—it can, in the final analysis, be chopped up for firewood and still fulfil its destiny to bring you pleasure and remind you of the happy times you spent treasure hunting, outdoors.

STRICTLY for the BIRDS

If you'd had an ophthalmic light you could almost have examined his eyes!

But there was more.

When we returned to the house, darned if George didn't follow and it was when we were in the sort of sun lounge porch that Howard reached on a shelf for a tobacco tin. "We keep a few worms for him here in damp moss," he said. A foot or two away stood George, legs apart, looking every inch a thrush. Which wasn't surprising because our robins are misnamed.

To see how he would react, I remember holding on to a worm and George would rear back and tug as he would with a recalcitrant specimen he might have plucked from the early morning lawn. I remember in some of the close-ups I took, the unfortunate worm seemed to be twanging like a G-string!

The topper came a few weeks later when I heard George had been travelling. Apparently one afternoon when Grace, headed for a visit to Cordova Bay, went out to the car George was fluttering round her head.

When she settled behind the wheel, George settled on the seat back beside her. So she closed the door and off they went to Cordova Bay, where George was quite content to wait in the car until it was time to drive back to Oak Bay.

Came finally a day when George failed to respond to the Bell's cook house summons, and the conclusion was that nature had reasserted itself. Probably some little hen thrush broke George's spell of domesticity, for after all he was only human. Well, darn near it!

But for the interlude of George and the humming birds I'm afraid, as I said before, my bird watching has not been of the dedicated type.

British Wild Flowers Come to Life

In the foreword of The Concise British Flora in Color Prince Philip says: "Although there are many books of this kind, few of them cover virtually all the British wild flowers with such accuracy in the compass of one colorful volume."

The author has combined the touch of the artist and the skill of the draughtsman in his hundreds of reproductions of British wild flowers.

Packed closely on each colored plate, each is easily seen and quickly identified on the opposite page.

THE CONCISE BRITISH FLORA IN COLOR, by W. Eble Martin. Nomenclature edited by Douglas H. Kent. Thomas Nelson & Sons (Canada Limited). 201 pages. $7.95.

There is no searching through the book to match up names and numbers in this volume.

It is not a gardening book, but rather a field guide to the identification of 1,420 specimens, about 1,400 of them in full color.

It is the culmination of 60 years of study, research and field work on the part of the author, who has drawn and painted each small picture strictly from observation of the living plant. In the case of some of the rarer specimens it took many seasons of collecting, with a careful eye to the conservation of the species, to produce one illustration of such meticulous accuracy.

Even the lowly grasses, of which there are about 100 in color and another 100 in black and white, seem to come to life in this book.

Each plant is listed under its botanical name and also its common name, so that it is a matter of seconds to find any particular subject. There is also a complete glossary of terms used in the descriptions. The nomenclature edited by Douglas H. Kent is strictly in accord with the rules of the International Botanical Congress.

Any grower of flowers, even one who has attained the status of horticulturist, would be enchanted to rifle through these pages and see at a glance, in beautiful color and scientific detail, the origin and antecedents of so many of his cultivated treasures.—IDYL GOODMANSON.

SKIPPER Tor Miller nets mud shark for admiring fishermen.

PARTY BOAT FUN FISHING

For the past two summers, Bob Wright, the 34-year-old manager of the Oak Bay Marina, spent considerable time fielding questions from American tourists about the state of fishing off the suburban waterfront.

Did he have boats available? How much was the rental fee? And what can we catch?

As the requests piled up, Wright and others concerned with the running of Western Canada's largest marina complex—a $1,000,000 project which now handles wharfage for 400 pleasure boats, and includes a restaurant and coffee shop, a specialty store and marine and equipment shops—decided the solution lay in giving amateur anglers an outing on the water where, by the law of averages, they were bound to bring home finny trophies.

Thus, angling togetherness was born off Oak Bay.

A 61-foot flying bridge cruiser, the MV Lakewood—a converted Royal Canadian Navy torpedo recovery vessel—was converted at a cost of $30,000 and made ready for the hordes of potential customers to whom a fishing line and live bait were about as familiar as a tiger-hunting expedition in India.

The Lakewood went into service in mid-June, capable of carrying up to 40 passengers on cruises lasting nearly four hours, which range from Race Rocks to Saturna Island in search of salmon, halibut, ling cod, bass, snapper, rock fish and mud-shark.

Under command of keen-eyed skipper Frank

GUIDE George Moore galls rockfish, one of scores caught on each boat trip.

(Tor) Miller, a veteran commercial fisherman who knows the local waters like the back of his hand, and carrying fishing guide George Moore, the Lakewood makes several trips a day from early morning to late evening, its decks crammed with eager Izaak Waltons.

For approximately $1 an hour—which includes free coffee—all the passengers need do is throw a line overboard and hope for the best. The best, in most cases, are fat cod, which seem to take the bait almost as soon as it sinks to the ocean floor.

There is no age limit to the outing.

On a recent cruise, four-year-old Ross McKay, of Victoria, competed for angling honors with Leonard Wilkes, 77, who has been a salmon fisherman for as long as he can remember. But for all his prowess with salmon, Mr. Wilkes appeared delighted to find a five-pound rock cod on his line and pulled it in to exclaim jubilantly: "I feel so proud."

In the profusion of fishing tackle that decorates the Lakewood like a Christmas tree each trip, it's a common occurrence for the passengers to find themselves excitedly hauling in each other's lines, resulting in a jumble of sinkers, hooks and bait.

There's a 75-cent charge for lost lines, which doesn't appear to faze the average angler. But one Portland visitor who lost both his first fish and tackle and faced shelling out for a second try, decided to end it all on the spot—and spent the rest of the outing peering gloomily out the cabin window at shore.

Whether one catches a fish or not, the togetherness cruise appears to delight the passengers.

But passing veterans of the Oak Bay fishing grounds tend to regard the entire venture with a touch of humor as they circle the Lakewood in their outboards. The picture of wildly thrashing rods over the cruiser's side tends to make seasoned sports fishermen ready to tearfully turn in their tackle.

It probably all comes as a horrible shock to the fish, too.
